"(iii) other Federal funds received by the grantee are not available for the development, establishment, and operation of such system due to the insufficiency of the amount of such funds, the restrictions on the use of such funds, or the prior commitment of such funds for other purposes by the grantee.

On the next day, Article II was incorporated into the Joint Draft Text as a provision fully accepted by both parties. In so doing, the U.S. team had secured language which insured that future ABMs were covered and which reinforced the September agreement on Article V(1) that mobile ABMs, both existing and future, would be confined to research.

Thus, by late December, the subject of whether or not the treaty would restrict both present and future types of mobile ABMs was essentially closed except for a drafting change proposed by the U.S. in April, and accepted by the Soviets. (This minor change made clear that mobile components of an otherwise fixed land-based system were prohibited.) After completion of Article II, with regard to NSDM 127 the remaining issue was the U.S. proposal to prohibit the deployment of future types of ABMs which were fixed and land-based. None of the statements or proposals made by either delegation between the completion of Article II on December 22, 1971, and the conclusion of the negotiations raised questions about the agreement reached on prohibiting mobile ABMs. The delegations did continue to discuss Article V, but the negotiations were completely focused on the U.S. proposal for Article V(3), which at that time related to fixed land-based ABMs.

C. NEGOTIATION ON FIXED LAND-BASED ABM'S

The U.S. had first proposed in August 1971 that the treaty text include an Article prohibiting the deployment of fixed land-based ABMs using future technology. This became known as Article V(3). Throughout the fifth session in Helsinki, the Soviet delegation expressed its opposition to such a prohibition. While the Soviets did agree in the fifth session to a broad ban in Article V(1) on future ABMs which were mobile, the U.S. proposed Article V(3) on fixed land-based systems remained in brackets, indicating disagreement, in the joint draft text when the fifth session ended.

Early in the sixth session in Vienna, the Soviet delegation renewed its opposition to a ban on futrue fixed land-based ABMs. Their opposition took the form of asserting that the treaty should not limit weapon systems which could not be explictly identified. Some members of the U.S. delegation beleived that the Soviets were engaged in a fishing expedition—attempting to obtain information on secret U.S. laser research programs. Their opposition, however, never extended to the ban in Article V(1) on mobile ABM systems. At no time did the Soviet delegation deny or cast doubt on the agreement reached between Graybeal and Karpov on September 15. Moreover, in early December, while expressing opposition to the U.S. proposal on future fixed land-based ABMs, Chulitsky, a Soviet negotiator, made an explicit statement that future mobile-type ABMs were already prohibited by Article V(1). On December 4, Chulitsky argued "that the prohibition on air-based, space-based, land-based, [sic] etc. ABM systems is adequate to cover the problem of future systems."

Despite this initial opposition to banning deployment of future fixed land-based ABMs, substantial progress on the question was made during the sixth session; and the issue was finally settled during the seventh. In a series of steps, from December 1971 to May 1972, involving Articles I, II, III, and Agreed Statement D, the delegation obtained Soviet agreement to ban deployment of future fixed land-based ABM systems. First, full agreement was reached on Articles I and II. Second, the U.S. withdrew Article V(3) but obtained the same ban on future fixed land-based ABMs in Agreed Statement D and Article III.

ARTICLE I(2)

At the opening of the sixth session, the Soviet delegation proposed that Article I include an undertaking not to deploy ABM systems for a defense of either sides' territory. On November 30, Soviet negotiator Kishilov described his new language as a "partial substitute" for the U.S. proposal on future systems in Article V(3). We accepted the new Soviet language on December 21, after the insertion of a phrase also prohibiting a "base" for a territorial defense. On the same day, both delegations agreed to Article II, which defined an ABM system as including future systems. Thus, the combination of Article I and Article II partially fulfilled the objectives of NSDM 127—that the treaty not allow circumvention of the ban on nationwide defenses through deployment of future fixed land-based ABMs. At the same time, we continued to insist that Article I did not obviate the need for specific language prohibiting that deployment.

By this time, the delegation was authorized to provide examples of future ABM systems. This instruction was designed as a response to the Soviet argument that future ABMs should be identified. On December 10, 1971, pursuant to these instructions, Harold Brown specified the "lasers and particle accelerators" would be covered by the proposed ban. Following Brown's identification of future systems, an important facet of the Soviet rationale for objecting to deployment ban became apparent in a December 10 exchange between Soviet negotiator Shchukin and Paul Nitze. Shchukin explained that both sides had agreed to prohibit territorial defenses and that the Soviet proposal for Article I would "ban the deployment of future systems in a manner providing a territorial defense." However, if new technology were to allow the permitted ABM functions at fixed land-based sites to be carried out "in a more efficient and less costly manner" he believed such new technology should be permitted. When Nitze asked how the sides could be sure that the nature of new technologies would not render meaningless the numerical restrictions in Article III on permitted systems, Shchukin suggested, "were such future systems to reach a stage where they could be deployed, the question would be referred to the Standing Commission, through which the necessary regulations could be worked out." Nitze then asked Shchukin whether the Soviets could agree that no such deployment could take place without prior agreement in the SCC. Shchukin said yes.

This discussion helped prepare the groundwork for subsequent agreement. NSDM 127 had indicated that the U.S. objective was to prohibit the deployment of future fixed land-based ABMs but to allow development and testing. The instructions also indicated that any problems that might arise should be handled through the SCC. Soviet negotiator Shchukin's comments made clear that the Soviet Union would be willing to accept this formulation, and the basis for agreement was apparent.

AGREED STATEMENT D AND ARTICLE III

After recognizing that the essence of both sides' positions were not that far apart, on December 17 Garthoff suggested the possibility that Article V(3) need not necessarily be part of the treaty but could be an agreed interpretation, so long as the substance of the U.S. position was maintained. Three days later, Garthoff told his counterpart that while an "agreed minute" might be acceptable in lieu of the language in Article V(3) "there must be a clear agreed mutual understanding that, prior to any deployment of future systems and components, there would be consultation and agreement in the Standing Consultative Commission." On December 20, when Garthoff transmitted proposed language for the agreed minute, he said, "while maintaining our basic position on this matter, the U.S. side is willing to drop Article V(3) if there is a clear agreed understanding." Thus, when the U.S. delegation proposed to drop Article V(3), it did so on the condition that its "basic position" on future fixed land-based ABM systems be made part of a binding understanding, not as a trade-off for other Soviet concessions. Indeed, Article V(3) was not actually dropped from the draft text until much later when the U.S. delegation was satisfied that its substance had been fully agreed.

The proposed agreed minute was to be tied to Article III, which specified the permitted ABM deployments. While Article III of the Treaty was not completed until the seventh session in April 1972, the basic substance of the Article was clear in January 1972: each side would only be permitted limited ABM deployment areas, and severe quantitative and qualitative limits would be placed on the fixed systems located at the designated areas. The U.S. goal was to ensure that these limits could not be obviated through deployments of ABM systems and components which employed new technology or by other circumventions. Paul Nitze expressed this concern on January 11, 1972, asking rhetorically, if future "components were developed and could in fact be deployed in a manner to circumvent the specific limitations of Article III of the treaty, would it not be appropriate that they also be subject to agreement between our Governments?"

Negotiating exchanges in January 1972 demonstrated that both delegations understood that large-scale deployment of future fixed land-based systems would be prohibited even without the agreed minute to replace Article V(3). According to the negotiating record, on January 11 Garthoff asked his Soviet counterpart whether, "in the light of Article I, II, III, Grinevsky considered that a part would have the right—assuming consultations were held and did not lead to agreement—to deploy all around the country, say, a thousand stations for firing anti-ballistic missile laser interceptor beams. Grinevsky said no, it would not have such a right. But, he countered, it should be able to place telescopes."

The example of "telescopes" raised an important question which, among other things, delayed final agreement on the text of Agreed Statement D. Telescopes, making use of different technology, could be used to assist ABM radars in discriminating between real reentry vehicles and decoys or chaff. Such devices, which the U.S. side called "adjuncts," were not intended to substitute for ABM launchers, radars, and missiles, but merely to supplement them. Indeed, like the Soviet military, the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff wanted to ensure that "adjuncts" based on new technology could be part of a permitted deployment. Resolving how the possibility of "adjuncts" would be treated, which was of great importance to the Defense Department, required many more days of discussions but is not central to the reinterpretation issue.

JANUARY 31, 1972

After two more weeks of negotiation on Agreed Statement D, the sides agreed on two important points at a January 31, 1972, meeting. First, the combination of Articles I, II, III would prohibit the deployment of future fixed land-based ABM systems even without an agreed understanding. Second, the agreed understanding would require that future deployment of components based on "other physical principles" be subject to discussion and agreement in the SCC if the new technology could substitute for the components limited in Article III, but not if it merely served as an "adjunct" to those components.

At that meeting, Garthoff read to his Soviet counterpart Grinevsky a prepared paper, entitled "Statement on 'Future ABM Systems,'" which expressed these two points clearly. It confirmed that no ABM systems could be deployed except as provided for in Article III and that Article III "should be drafted so as not to permit the deployment of devices other than ABM interceptor missiles, ABM launchers, or ABM radars to substitute for and perform their functions." The paper also stated that "Devices other than ABM interceptor missiles, ABM launchers, or ABM radars could be used as adjuncts to an ABM system provided that the devices could not perform the functions of and substitute" for these three existing components. Soviet negotiator Grinevsky, after reading this prepared paper, said "he believed there was complete agreement." Within two days, a number of minor drafting changes were completed and both delegations expressed their satisfaction with the language of Agreed Statement D.

The final discussions on Article III took place at the sixth and seventh negotiating sessions. In keeping with the mutual understanding reached in January that Article III would prohibit deployment of any ABM systems other than those expressly permitted in the article, we proposed on April 26, 1972, the following lead-in language to Article III: "Each Party undertakes not to deploy ABM systems or their components except as follows: . . ." On April 28, Soviet negotiator Grinevsky told Parsons that the Soviet delegation could agree to a formulation for Article III in which neither side could deploy ABM systems or their components "except as the Article would provide" and that "this would ban 'other systems.'" (Grinevsky's statement is also confirmation that the Soviet delegation understood that the phrase "ABM systems and components" includes future systems.) The final text agreed to in May 1972 incorporated this lead-in.

The U.S. recognized from January 1972 onward that because Article III would prohibit deployment of any system which it did not expressly permit, Agreed Statement D was not strictly necessary to prevent deployment of future fixed land-based ABM systems. However, because the U.S. had constantly been seeking more, not less, specificity and precision, there was no sensible reason to delete it, especially since Article III and Agreed Statement D were mutually reinforcing. Indeed, the U.S. believed the agreed understanding was important for other reasons. NSDM 127 instructed the delegation that the agreement "should not prohibit the development and testing of future ABM components in a fixed land-based mode" and that "the agreement should not be interpreted in such a way that either side could circumvent its provisions through future ABM systems or components." Because Agreed Statement D only prohibited the deployment of future fixed land-based systems, it implicitly allowed development and testing. Moreover, by clarifying that future technologies would become subject to discussion and agreement in the SCC only when they were "capable of substituting for" existing components, Agreed Statement D not only prevented circumvention of the specific limitations on deployment in Article III, it also allowed for the use of new technologies as "adjuncts," an outcome sought by both sides.

THE FINAL MEMORANDUM

From January to May 1972, I wrote a series of Memoranda to clarify what points had been agreed and what points required further discussion. In preparing these Memoranda, I would confer with members of the delegation to determine our understanding of the agreed meaning of various articles in the treaty. The final Memorandum, dated May 24, 1972, reflected the views of the entire U.S. delegation. With respect to Article V(1), it states:

"Paragraph 1 of Article V prohibits the development, testing, or deployment of: an ABM system that is sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based; an ABM interceptor missile, ABM launcher, or ABM radar that is sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based; a device capable of substituting for an ABM interceptor missile, ABM launcher or ABM radar that is sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based (such as an air-based 'killer' laser)."

The memorandum was also clear with regard to the scope of the definition in Article II:

"An ABM system is described in paragraph 1 of Article II in terms of 'current' ABM components. This does not, however, limit the generality of the term ABM system as used in the Treaty to systems composed of 'current' ABM components, but would also include 'future systems' based on physical principles other than those used for 'current' ABM components and capable of substituting for a 'current' ABM component."

Senator Nunn characterized the Memorandum as follows: "In this form, the memorandum fully confirms the Traditional Interpretation of the Treaty as presented to the Senate and directly refutes Sofaer's reinterpretation." Indeed, the substance of the advice in this memorandum as summarized in a chapter I wrote for a book, (published in 1974), which stated "The overall effect of the treaty, therefore, is to prohibit any deployment of future systems and to limit their development and testing to those in a fixed land-based mode."

There is no doubt whatsoever that the entire U.S. delegation, including Paul Nitze, reviewed and agreed on this issue in 1972. The reinterpretation is nothing short of a repudiation of the delegation's explicit and unanimous understanding of the treaty's meaning.

The history of the ABM Treaty negotiations demonstrates that when the U.S. and Soviet delegations reached agreement on the text of the treaty both sides understood its meaning as being the traditional interpretation. That interpretation establishes the legal obligations of the United States under international law and domestic law. Unilateral U.S. implementation of the new interpretation without an agreed formal amendment would constitute a material breach of the treaty.

BEYOND THE REINTERPRETATION

During the negotiations, the delegation purposely left open details as to the exact scope of the term ABM "component" in the context of future technologies. This was consistent with NSDM 127, which sought agreement on the broad principle. It also reflected the fact that the U.S. government did not then know how to address that subject sensibly at a high level of specificity. What constitutes a new "component," coupled with the related question of the dividing line between permitted research and prohibited development, are the issues that should be engaging the U.S. and Soviet delegations now in Geneva. While their current public position is unduly restrictive, the Soviets have offered to negotiate these issues. The U.S. delegation, however, reportedly has explicit instructions from President Reagan not to negotiate on this question because it would legitimize the traditional interpretation. This is an unprecedented posture for the United States since the beginning of SALT and one which will almost certainly block any chance to achieve the deep reductions in offensive systems the President seeks. The posture is particularly unfortunate, because a prudent, verifiable threshold applicable to future systems would even permit continued research and development in space on SDI programs, as long as the work remained below the capabilities necessary for a true ABM role.

The Congress and Executive are unlikely to remain in a stalemate over the reinterpretation issue in the context of the upcoming budget. If enacted, the pending Nunn-Levin amendment would have the effect of legislating the "traditional" interpretation as part of the Senate's Defense Department authorization bill. That amendment could be added to the appropriations bill or a continuing resolution. A similar provision passed the House by a vote of 262-159. Such an approach is clearly constitutional. While the President threatens a veto, it is hard to imagine the government shutting down over disagreement on this issue. Congress should remain firm. Using its power of the purse, Congress should require U.S. adherence to the traditional interpretation.

From a political point of view, the White House continues to suffer serious damage by not accepting the position of Senator Nunn, Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and thus avoiding a major confrontation with this pro-defense, conservative Democrat, whose support is so critical to the Defense Department. It appears to be sheer madness to challenge Nunn's reasoned views, which were understated, but laid out with characteristic precision. This is especially true because the reinterpretation is not even necessary in order to continue a robust SDI program, which Nunn supports. The President's closest advisers must try to regain control of political reality.

The consequences of McFarlane's ill-advised announcement nearly two years ago, and the constantly unsound advice received from Sofaer both before and after, continue to bedevil the administration. The President should come to understand that while the reinterpretation may not block a summit and an INF agreement, it is a legal sham that seriously damages the international credibility of the United States and makes impossible the achievement of deep reductions in offensive arms, which could be the capstone of the Reagan presidency.

NOTES

The full quotation reads:

"The future systems ban applies to devices which would be capable of substituting for one or more of the three basic ABM components, such as a 'killer' laser or a particle accelerator. Article III of the treaty does not preclude either development or testing of fixed land-based devices which could substitute for ABM components, but does prohibit their deployment. Article V, on the other hand, prohibits development and testing, as well as deployment, of air-based, sea-based, space-based, or mobile land-based ABM systems or components, which includes 'future systems' for those kinds of environments. The overall effect of the treaty, therefore, is to prohibit any deployment of future systems and to limit their development and testing to those in a fixed land-based mode. Certain devices, such as telescopes, which are simply adjuncts to, not substitutes for, present ABM components are not covered."

THE MEANING OF THE ABM TREATY

The following description of how the ABM Treaty deals with future systems will help the reader appreciate the reasoning of the delegation as it built the interlocking components of the treaty.

Article I(2) sets out the object and purpose of the treaty. It reads: "Each Party undertakes not to deploy ABM systems for a defense of the territory of its country and not to provide a base for such a defense, and not to deploy ABM systems for defense of an individual region except as provided for in Article III of this Treaty." The remainder of the treaty consists of a series of Articles which express more specific obligations of the parties in fulfilling this object and purpose.

Artile II(1) provides the critical definition: "For the purpose of this Treaty an ABM system is a system to counter strategic ballistic missiles or their elements in flight trajectory, currently consisting of: a) ABM interceptor missiles . . . b) ABM launchers . . . c) ABM radars."

This definition is functional. An ABM system is defined as any weapon system functionally able to "counter strategic ballistic missiles or their elements in flight trajectory." The fact that an ABM system could include components based on new technologies is implicity referred to by the phrase "currently consisting of." By stating that ABM systems "currently" consist of missiles, launchers, and radars, the language purposefully indicates that ABM systems could consist of other components. Otherwise, the word "currently" would not be necessary. Moreover, the fact that a comma was included in the text made clear that the subsequent phrase was non-restrictive in nature.

Article III provides the specific quantitative, qualitative, and geographic limits on the permitted ABM deployment of fixed land-based ABM systems consisting of interceptor missiles, launchers, and radars. The opening clause reads: "Each Party undertakes not to deploy ABM systems or their components except" those specified in the rest of this Article which are explicitly limited to "current" technology. By virtue of this lead-in language, the Article makes clear that all deployments are prohibited except those that are expressly permitted and specifically that deployment of future ABM systems and components is not allowed. The provision goes on to provide that "a Party may deploy . . . no more than one hundred ABM launchers and no more than one hundred ABM interceptor missiles at launch sites [and certain] ABM radars . . ." at two geographically designated areas, a right which was rendered to one deployment area in the 1974 ABM Protocol. By limiting the firepower of the permitted systems, and by virtue of the specific qualitative and geographic limits, Article III was expressly designed to ensure that Article I was not circumvented by deployment of any "future" systems.

Article V provides a critical barrier against the deployment of nationwide defenses or a base for such a deployment. The first paragraph of Article V reads: "Each Party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based." Space-based and other mobile ABM systems are inherently capable of a nationwide defense. They were confined to the research stage. Because of the functional definition of an ABM system in Article II, this broad ban on space-based and other mobile systems applies to any of ABM system, regardless of whether its components include interceptor missiles or high-powered lasers capable of substituting for such missiles.

Article IV authorizes the development and testing of fixed land-based systems at ABM test ranges. In addition to sanctioning development and testing, this Article prohibits unauthorized "deployment" around the country in the guise of test programs. By prohibiting the testing of any space-based components, Article V(1) buttresses this aspect of Article IV. However, Article IV and the rest of the Treaty permit the development and testing of fixed land-based future systems at ABM test ranges.

Article VI is intended to ensure that the treaty cannot be circumvented by using weapon systems designed for other purposes as ABMs. In so doing, it limits non-ABM activities by applying the same functional definition of an ABM system used in Article II of the treaty: "each Party undertakes: (a) not to give missiles, launchers, or radars, other than ABM interceptor missiles, ABM launchers, or ABM radars, capabilities to counter strategic balistic missiles or their elements in flight trajectory, and not to test them in an ABM mode . . ."

Article XV provides that "This Treaty shall be of unlimited duration." This article makes clear that the treaty was intended as a permanent obligation. It would have been a near contradiction in terms to provide permanent obligations limited to the technology of the day.

The treaty also contains a series of clarifying and interpretive "Agreed Statements," one of which, Agreed Statement D, relates to future ABM systems. Agreed Statement D supplements Article III, which dealt exclusively with fixed land-based systems. This was made clear in its opening clause: "In order to insure fulfillment of the obligation not to deploy ABM systems and their components except as provided in Article III of the Treaty . . ." Agreed Statement D goes on to provide that if future fixed land-based systems are created, their deployment "would be subject to discussion in accordance with Article XIII (procedures of the SCC) and agreement in accordance with Article XIV of the Treaty (amendment procedure)." Thus, while Agreed Statement D provides a mechanism to consider deployment of future fixed land-based ABM systems, it makes clear that deployment would require agreement and amendment of the treaty. This amendment would then have to be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent, underscoring the fact that further deployment of systems involving exotic technologies wasd a fundamental issue that could undermine the basic objective and operation of the treaty.

HISTORY CONFIRMS THE TRADITIONAL MEANING—U.S. AND SOVIET SUBSEQUENT PRACTICE UNDER THE ABM TREATY

(By Raymond L. Garthoff)

(Raymond L. Garthoff, executive secretary to the U.S. SALT I delegation and a former ambassador to Bulgaria, is a Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution.)

In justifying the Reagan administration's radical rewriting of the Antiballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, administration spokesmen have repeatedly claimed that the Soviet Union never committed itself to the traditional interpretation. That interpretation, which goes to the very heart of the treaty, prohibits development and testing of space-based and other mobile ABM systems and components whether based on traditional ABM technology or on "other physical principles." In an article in the Harvard Law Review in 1986, State Department Legal Adviser Abraham Sofaer, the reinterpretation's chief legal champion, stated that the Soviet Union did not "begin explicitly to articulate the restrictive interpretation" until after the U.S. reinterpretation was announced in October 1985. That statement is incorrect, and the argument that flows from it is unfounded.

A number of clear and authoritative Soviet statements have spelled out the traditional view, both before and after the October 1985 announcement of the U.S. reinterpretation. In particular, Marshal Sergei Akhromeyer, Chief of the Soviet General Staff and First Deputy Minister of Defense, set out the Soviet position unequivocally in a major Pravda article which appeared months before the U.S. announced its new position. After the treaty's text, such statements of interpretation—referred to as "subsequent practice"—are the most important source of information in determining a treaty's meaning. Both U.S. and Soviet subsequent practices under the ABM Treaty unambiguously support the traditional interpretation. The traditional reading of the treaty's terms is thus binding on both parties.

THE ISSUE

On October 6, 1985, the then national security adviser, Robert McFarlane, casually announced a new interpretation of the ABM Treaty: This new "broad" interpretation would permit development and testing of space-based and other mobile ABM systems and components "based on other physical principles"—such as lasers or particle beams. In essence, the "broad" interpretation holds that such futuristic ABM systems are not "ABM systems and components" as those words are used in the treaty, and hence most of the treaty's limitations, including the Article V(I) ban on development and testing of space-based ABM systems and components, do not apply to them. If valid, the broad interpretation would open up much greater opportunities for development and testing under the administration's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

The broad interpretation has been rejected by all but one of the U.S. ABM Treaty negotiators—and Paul Nitze, the one negotiator who now supports the administration's position, had previously held the traditional view. (None of the negotiators except Nitze, now a senior arms control adviser for the President and the Secretary of State, had been consulted prior to the announcement of the new interpretation.) Senator Sam Nunn (D-GA) has released an exhaustive and scathing four-part critique of the arguments put forward by State Department Legal Adviser Abraham Sofaer, the reinterpretation's chief advocate. Nevertheless, the administration continues to hold that its new interpretation is "the legally correct interpretation."

The immediate issue is whether the administration's claim that the ABM Treaty allows development and testing of space-based ABM systems and components based on other physical principles is justified. The larger question is whether the United States should support a policy that clearly violates threaty obligations which constitute the law of the land. The issue also involves the international obligations and credibility of the United States as a supporter of the rule of law. Added to these considerations are the future of arms control and the U.S.-Soviet relationship.

TREATY INTERPRETATION

How is the meaning of a treaty determined? According to the canons of legal interpretation, the first and strongest evidence is the express language of a treaty. This means the letter of a treaty, not its spirit. The purpose of the treaty is, however, relevant in determining the meaning of the language. Language must be interpreted in good faith. Only if the language is not sufficiently clear does one go on to the next step, review of subsequent practice. The term subsequent practice covers the whole range of practical implementation of a treaty as evidence reflecting the understanding of the parties as to the meaning of the treaty's terms. Both actions and statements must be considered. (The ABM Treaty ratification record is also mentioned here to provide a more complete picture of U.S. and Soviet understanding of the treaty.) Normally, only if subsequent practice is unclear does one review the negotiating record, to determine the intent and the understanding of the parties, particularly as conveyed by their negotiations as they agreed upon the language of the treaty.

The Sofaer reinterpretation violated this established process. The express language of the treaty was challenged on the basis of the logic of its construction rather than its intent. Then a reconstruction of the logic of the language was justified by a reading of parts of the negotiating record. Subsequent practice had not been given more than the most superficial review before the new interpretation was adopted. Indeed, at this writing Sofaer's study of the subsequent practice of the parties has still not been sent to the President or to the Congress. Despite the absence of any study of the subsequent practice of the parties—after the treaty's text, the most critical evidence in determining a treaty's meaning—the administration continues to claim that the broad interpretation is "fully justified."

SUBSEQUENT ACTIONS UNDER THE ABM TREATY

The United States and the Soviet Union have without exception acted in accordance with the traditional interpretation of the ABM Treaty. While both the United States and the Soviet Union have pursued military research programs in such possible ABM technologies as lasers and particle beams, neither nation's programs have yet reached the point of development or testing of mobile ABM systems or components based on other physical principles.

Both before and after the reinterpretation was announced, the Reagan administration has insisted that it is conducting its SDI program entirely within the constraints of the traditional interpretation. Similarly, while the Reagan administration has charged the Soviets with a variety of violations or probable violations of the ABM Treaty, neither the Reagan administration nor any other administration has ever alleged that the Soviets have conducted any development or testing of ABM systems and components "based on other physical principles" that would be limited under the traditional view.

Some skeptics argue that national technical means of verification may not be adequate to detect some activities going beyond the constraints imposed by the traditional interpretation. But that is a supposition, and whatever weight it may be given for other purposes, it does not provide any evidence supporting the reinterpretation.

Advocates of the reinterpretation argue that there has simply not yet been opportunity for testing advanced technologies. While that point does diminish the weight of the absence of contravening actions as an argument for the traditional interpretation, it does not provide a basis for arguing that subsequent practice lends any support to the reinterpretation.

U.S. SUBSEQUENT STATEMENTS CONCERNING THE ABM TREATY

Numerous official U.S. statements from 1972 to 1985 directly support the traditional interpretation, none assert the reinterpretation. The interpretations provided to the Senate during the ratification process clearly supported the traditional view, including authoritative statements by the Secretary of Defense, the Director of Defense Research and Engineering and the acting Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army. As a result, the Senate gave its consent to ratification, by a vote of 88-2, understanding the treaty to ban all development and testing of space-based and other mobile ABM systems and components. All U.S. administrations from 1972 to 1985, including the Reagan administration prior to October 1985, have made clear and unequivocal statements of the traditional view. As Senator Nunn has pointed out in his excellent studies of the subject, prior to 1985 there were no U.S. government statements that directly supported the reinterpretation.

What is less widely known is that the Soviet government has also unequivocally and authoritatively stated its adherence to the traditional view, even before the U.S. reinterpretation was announced. This fact fundamentally undermines the administration's case, for a primary rationale advanced for the new interpretation is that the Soviet Union might not consider itself bound by the traditional interpretation, and that the United States should not let itself be bound unilaterally.[1] It is important, therefore, to review Soviet statements concerning the interpretation of the ABM Treaty as it relates to development and testing of space-based and other mobile ABM systems based on other physical principles.

THE SOVIET RATIFICATION PROCESS

Unlike the U.S. ratification record, the publicly available portion of the Soviet ratification record does not provide any decisive evidence either supporting or contradicting the reinterpretation. Two statements, however, are relevant to the issue.

On September 29, 1972, in the absence of Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, First Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs Vasily V. Kuznetsov, "on behalf of the Soviet Government," gave the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. the official Soviet government position on the ABM Treaty. He drew attention among other things to the provision that "the parties are obligated not to create and not to deploy sea-, air-, space-, or mobile- land-based anti-ballistic missile defense systems or components." While he did not specifically address the matter of future systems based on other physical principles, he presented the ban on creation (development and testing) of mobile ABM systems as an unqualified obligation.

Marshal Andrei Grechko, then Minister of Defense, also testified before the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet. He stated that the ABM Treaty "does not place any limitations on the conduct of research and experimental work directed toward solution of the problems of defense of the country against nuclear-missile strikes." That broad statement essentially asserts what adherents of both the traditional and broad interpretations agree: the treaty does not prohibit research or laboratory experimentation short of developmental testing. Even if the term "experimental work" were construed as including system or component testing, in my view not a warranted reading, it would still be entirely compatible with permitted development and testing of fixed land-based systems and components. Contrary to allegations made by some proponents of the broad interpretation, Grechko did not assert that development and testing of new types of space-based, air-based, sea-based, or mobile land-based ABM systems or components were allowed. Indeed, he made no statement about such systems, nor about future systems based on other physical principles.

SOVIET POSTRATIFICATION STATEMENTS

Sofaer has claimed that the Soviets did not "begin explicitly to articulate the restrictive interpretation" until after the U.S. reinterpretation was announced in October 1985, and dismisses all Soviet assertions of it since that date on the grounds that they are merely opposing the U.S. position. His representation of the record before October 1985 is untrue; his dismissal of statements after that date is unwarranted. If the administration argues that the reinterpretation is necessary to avoid a "double standard" binding, the U.S. but not the Soviet Union, authoritative and insistent Soviet affirmations of the traditional interpretation since October 1985, as well as before, are clearly relevant.

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

Some advocates of the reinterpretation go so far as to argue that all Soviet statements since March 23, 1983, are irrelevant, on the grounds that they are made in opposition to SDI, launched by President Reagan's speech on that date. What such arguments conveniently overlook is that until then, there was no need for Soviet (or other) commentaries to address the matter, because there was no issue. Moreover, whatever their purpose, these statements reconfirm Soviet acceptance of the traditional interpretation.

Of particular importance would be any statements of interpretation exchanged between the two sides, although, the issue not having arisen, one would not expect to find many such direct statements, at least before 1983. There are at least two such exchanges that include significant and relevant Soviet statements.

The first was between Ambassador Viktor Karpov, one of the Soviet ABM Treaty negotiators, and his U.S. counterpart, Ambassador Ralph Earle II, during the SALT II negotiations. On March 16, 1976, when the question of use of the word "currently" was in dispute, Karpov recalled that in negotiations on Article II of the ABM Treaty the word "currently" had been appropriate because that treaty was of unlimited duration and future components could emerge, which the treaty would be expected to cover. In other words, he took for granted and espoused the traditional interpretation of Article II of the ABM Treaty.

Sofaer's assistants learned of Karpov's remark in 1985, but although William Sims, a member of Sofaer's staff, brought it to his attention, he chose to exclude it from his October 1985 report and his classified report of August 1986, submitted to the U.S. Senate.

The second statement was by Lieutenant General Viktor Starodubov, then the Soviet Commissioner on the Standing Consultative Commission, to his counterpart, General Richard Ellis, in May 1985. He stated that under the treaty ABM systems or components based on other physical principles could not be tested in space. This statement, which preceded the reinterpretation and was in accordance with the official U.S. view at the time, clearly showed Soviet adherence to the traditional interpretation. Senator Nunn has called these two statements "smoking guns" for the traditional interpretation.

In addition to these private statements, there have been numerous public Soviet statements grounded in the traditional view, both before and after the announcement of the U.S. reinterpretation.

Colonel General Nikolai Chervov, for example, the head of the General Staff directorate charged with arms control matters, including interpretation of existing agreements, objected in April 1983 that Reagan's SDI was "completely inconsistent" with the commitments of the ABM Treaty, in particular Article V(I), which he cited in full. He also specifically said that the treaty "bans both sides from developing antiballistic missile defense based on new physical principles—lasers, microwave radiation, beam weapons, and so forth." [2] Another Soviet analyst noted that "it was prohibited to create, test and deploy other forms and types of ABM, sea, air, space or mobile land based." [3]

Many Soviet accounts charged actual or prospective violations of the ABM Treaty by particular SDI tests. Thus, for example, several articles charged that a laser demonstration "strike" by a U.S. space-shuttle was a "test" banned by the treaty.[4] While this particular case is probably not a valid charge, since the experiment was not a test of an ABM "component," the point is that the Soviet interpretation of the treaty was the traditional one: development and testing of space-based laser ABMs is prohibited. Many other examples of this kind reflect widespread Soviet understanding of the treaty in the traditional way.

One Soviet statement made before the Reagan administration's adoption of the reinterpretation deserves particular attention. On June 4, 1985, four months before McFarlane spoke (and before Sofaer had even read the ABM Treaty), Marshal Sergei Akhromeyev, Chief of the Soviet General Staff and First Deputy Minister of Defense, published an article on the ABM Treaty in Pravda.[5] His elaboration of the traditional interpretation is crystal clear, even if his rhetoric is charged and some of his statements (such as research being prohibited) are unjustified:

"The ABM Treaty (Article V) forbids the creation and testing of spacebased ABM systems or components, that is, precisely the objective of the U.S. "harmless research." In practice the creation of specific models of strike space weapons and even the testing of some of them are in full swing in the United States. Lasers of various types, electromagnetic guns, interceptor missiles, and antisatellite systems are being developed in laboratories and at proving grounds. All this so-called "research work" is in contravention of the ABM Treaty.

"Representatives of the U.S. Administration, counting on the uninformed nature of the public at large, are claiming that the provisions of the ABM Treaty relate only to those ABM systems and components that existed at the time the Treaty was signed. The means now being created and tested within the framework of the "Strategic Defense Initiative," they say, cannot be ranked as "ABM components" since they are not mentioned in Article II of the Treaty.

"The provisions of the Treaty apply to any systems intended, as defined in Article II of the Treaty, to counter strategic ballistic missiles or their elements in flight trajectory. Since the ABM components being created within the framework of the "Strategic Defense initiative" are intended for precisely this purpose, that is, they are designed to replace the interceptor missiles mentioned in the Treaty, all the provisions of the Treaty fully apply to them, above all the ban on the creation, testing, and deployment of space-based ABM systems or components.

"The American authors of the "Star Wars" program are particularly zealous in propagandizing the thesis that the development of "exotic" anti-ballistic missile systems (laser and beam weapons, and so forth) is not only not forbidden by the ABM Treaty, but is even virtually encouraged by it. Thus P. Nitze, adviser to the president and the secretary of state on the Geneva talks, openly presents the creation of space-based ABM components based on other physical principles as an action permitted by the ABM Treaty. For greater cogency references are made to the Agreed Statement accompanying the Treaty (E) [D] which says that in the event ABM systems based on other physical principles and containing components capable of substituting, in particular, for interceptor missiles are created in the future, specific limitation on such systems and their components would be subject to discussion and agreement between the sides.

"On the face of it this is a clear juggling of the facts. The aforementioned Agreed Statement regarding the Treaty indeed does not rule out the possibility of the sides' acquiring anti-ballistic missile systems "based on other physical principles," but only within the framework of the limitations envisaged by the Treaty as a whole, in other words in the single authorized area. The large-scale ABM system with space-based elements that the United States is planning cannot be restricted to a single area. It is a territorial and even a global ABM system that is totally prohibited by the Treaty. Therefore, the creation of laser, beam, and other such destructive components for that system is a direct violation of the Treaty."[6]

This is the chief of the Soviet General Staff, writing in Pravda months before the U.S. reinterpretation was announced. One could hardly ask for a clearer or more authoritative statement of the Soviet position, upholding the view that development and testing of "exotic" mobile ABM systems and components such as lasers and particle beams is prohibited by the ABM Treaty.

SOVIET REACTION TO THE REINTERPRETATION

The Soviet Union was never consulted before the announcement of the Reagan administration's reinterpretation of the ABM Treaty. Under accepted international practice, a question of material interpretation of obligations under a treaty, especially if it involves change in existing practice or would have the effect of an amendment, should be discussed and agreed upon by the parties. In addition, Article XIII of the ABM Treaty had set up a body and procedures—in the Standing Consultative Commission (SCC)—expressly for considering "questions concerning compliance with the obligations assumed and related situations which may be considered ambiguous." In any case, whether through the SCC or some other diplomatic contact, the question should have been raised with the Soviet Union before the U.S. government pronouncements. Only after the White House confirmation of a new interpretation on October 8 and 14, 1985, was the Soviet Embassy routinely informed of the new American position.

According to U.S. and Soviet diplomatic sources, there was no inquiry into the Soviet interpretation and no offer to discuss the matter. On February 11, 1987, Secretary of State Shultz told the House Appropriations Committee that no negotiations on the issue would be held with the Soviets, that the administration planned to proceed on the basis of "what we think it says." Three months later, the administration released portions of the classified negotiating record, again without consulting the Soviet Union.

Nevertheless, even without the benefit of prior discussions with the Soviets, the Soviet reaction to the Reagan administration's adoption of the new, broad interpretation—prefigured in Marshal Akhromeyev's perceptive prediction—should have come as no surprise to anyone. The reply was prompt. After a brief initial objection by TASS on October 9, 1985, Marshal Akhromeyev was chosen to set forth the official Soviet position in a major article in Pravda on October 19.[7] Akhromeyev derided the reinterpretation as a "deliberate deceit." "Article V of the Treaty," Akhromeyev wrote, "absolutely unambiguously bans the development, testing, and deployment of ABM systems or components of space or mobile land basing, moreover, regardless of whether these systems are based on existing or 'future' technologies." He explained the relevant provisions of the treaty in considerable detail, pointing out in particular that Agreed Statement D allows "creation" only of fixed, land-based systems "based on other physical principles" and in no way amends Article V's ban on development and testing of space-based and other mobile ABM systems and components. Again, the statement could hardly be more authoritative or unambiguous.

It is not necessary to cite all the numerous other Soviet discussions since October 1985 that reaffirm the traditional interpretation and reject the broad interpretation advanced by the Reagan administration. They include statements by the then Soviet defense minister, Marshal Sergei Sokolov, who added that the restriction of Agreed Statement D to fixed land-based systems "is confirmed by those officials who participated directly in the working out of the ABM Treaty"; an analysis in the principal legal periodical Soviet State and Law, which was written before the U.S. reinterpretation was announced, though published after it, in November 1985; and articles by several responsible Soviet officials involved in negotiating the ABM Treaty, including the chief of the Soviet delegation, Ambassador Vladimir Semenov, the current disarmanent chief, Ambassador Viktor Karpov, and the former senior deputy foreign minister, Ambassador Georgy Kornienko.[8]

SPACE-STRIKE WEAPONS?

Inasmuch as Sofaer has not at this writing submitted his report on subsequent practice, it is not known how he will treat these statements confirming Soviet adherence to the traditional interpretation. According to some reports, he may argue that the whole Soviet effort in recent years to get a new agreement banning "space strike weapons" implies that the Soviets do not believe that the ABM Treaty bans such weapons. Such an inferential approach is seriously flawed. In particular, it ignores the simple fact that the Soviet definition of space-strike weapons includes more than space-based ABMs. It explicitly includes antisatellite weapons and weapons directed from space at targets on the earth. Space-strike weapons simply cannot be equated with ABM systems.

Moreover, even to the extent the Soviet space-strike proposal duplicates or supersedes the ABM Treaty ban on space-based ABM systems, that does not imply anything that would diminish the ABM Treaty. By analogy, both the Soviet Union and, until 1982, the United States have sought a comprehensive nuclear test ban. No one has ever contended that their interest in such a treaty implied that they did not believe some categories of nuclear testing were already banned by the existing 1963 Limited Test Ban Treaty. Yet that would be the implication if the reported Sofaer approach were applied.

CONCLUSION

The Soviet subsequent practice from 1972 to date, like that of the United States from 1972 until 1985, has fully supported the validity of the traditional interpretation, and explicitly rejected the reinterpretation, both before and after the reinterpretation was announced. The record is unambiguous The Reagan administration's continued support of its radical reinterpretation of the ABM Treaty cannot be justified.

In seeking to place the matter in perspective, one could do worse than apply "the golden rule": what would the United States have thought if after many years the Soviet Union had suddenly, unilaterally, reinterpreted the ABM Treaty (or any other) to suit a policy purpose of its own, contrary to U.S. policy and to the original clear understanding of both parties? What would the United States have thought if the Soviets had then publicly acknowledged that they had done so without examining either their own ratification record or the record of the subsequent practice of the parties, without consulting any but one of their own negotiators, and before compiling much of their own relevant negotiating records?

[1] Of course, the best way to determine whether the Soviets consider themselves bound to the traditional restrictive interpretation would obviously have been to ask them for a clear recommitment. If they did not agree that the traditional interpretation was the correct one, the United States could then have adopted a broader reading, or sought to negotiate agreement on the traditional or any new basis to ensure that both would be bound by the same obligations. The administration did not take this path because it knew that the Soviet government would in fact strongly reaffirm the traditional interpretation, making it much more difficult for the United States to free its hands for SDI testing.

AIR FORCE PROPOSAL TO KILL ASAT WEAPON

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on Friday, the New York Times reported that the Air Force is proposing to abandon the U.S. antisatellite weapon to reduce the budget, and that Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci is likely to accept its proposal. As a result, the public will save more than $2.5 billion over the next 5 years, a real savings which will translate to a lower budget deficit or the ability to spend the money on programs that do make sense.

Since I arrived in the Senate 3 years ago, I have come to the floor many times to argue that the Asat was an expensive lemon with serious strategic liabilities, and that the United States would be better off negotiating limits on weapons in space with the Soviets, rather than pushing Asat development forward.

Now, primarily as a consequence of budgetary pressures, the Defense Department is recognizing that it has to make choices and that marginal systems cannot be sustained forever, through changing rationales and cost overruns and regardless of strategic or arms control considerations.

I congratulate the Air Force on this proposal, which demonstrates a new realism by the Defense Department, and urge Secretary of Defense Carlucci to follow through on the decision to kill the Asat. The $2.5 billion he will save will start the process of real cuts in military spending that the Defense Department must undertake in the months ahead as move to bring the deficit crisis under control.

Indeed, the Federal deficit crisis has left no room in the budget for weapons we don't need. Americans understand that our national security must not be defined merely by how many weapons we buy, but by the strength of our economy. Unless we act decisively to cut the Federal budget deficit, our economy will continue to weaken, and we will be a less powerful nation as a consequence.

Our Nation would be far stronger today if President Reagan had recognized that the United States could not sustain the biggest military spending spree in the Nation's history and massive tax cuts simultaneously—that eventually something would have to give.

If we had decided at the outset not to spend so much money on redundant and marginal weapons, the Federal budget deficit, and the cuts required in all government spending, including military, would not be so severe now. When I ran for Senate, I said that our Government needed to make choices about such systems. At last, as a result of the budget process beginning to work, we are beginning to do so.

The decision to kill the U.S. Asat is only the second time in recent history that the Defense Department has been willing to accept a decision that a weapon hasn't worked out. The first time was the Divad. In both instances, the decision came only after enormous sums had been spent on research and development of a weapon that didn't do what it was supposed to do, and which cost more every time you looked at it.

This was evident 18 months ago, when the GAO issued a report concluding that even apart from the arms control objections to the testing of the U.S Asat, the U.S. Asat system had "limited projected operational capability, technical problems, recognized deficiencies in its readiness for production, and face[d] ever escalating costs."

The decision to develop the Asat in the first place was made by the Carter administration for the purpose of developing a bargaining chip in the process of negotiating overall limits on space weapons to eliminate loopholes left by the ABM Treaty. This was the position because our military felt we needed to get a strict legal regime to protect our satellites. In the words of former U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Charles A. Gabriel,

> I would rather both sides not have a capability to go to geosynchronous [orbit] with an Asat. In fact, I would like to be able to agree with the Soviets that we not have any Asat's if we could verify it properly. Because we are an open society, we need our space capabilities more than they do.

Unfortunately, the Reagan administration took the position that there was no Asat restriction that would be in the interests of the United States because of our need to be able to shoot down Soviet satellites in time of war.

Yet the trade off of each side having no capabilities to shoot down high altitude satellites would favor the United States. We rely on our satellites for information that is vital to our national defense, from command and control of our military forces to early warning of nuclear attack. Our military forces are far flung: Not only do we have bases around the world, but the preponderance of our nuclear weapons are located beyond our shores. If our satellites become threatened by future improvements in Soviet capabilities, we risk the decapitation of both nuclear and conventional forces, making it difficult for the United States to maintain a credible response to a sneak attack.

The long-term damage to our strategic security from the further development of Asat technologies by both sides outweighs whatever short-term theoretical advantage gained in going ahead with the testing of our current Asat.

In the words of Prof. Donald Hafner of Boston College, an adviser to the SALT delegation and the National Security Counsel in 1977-78:

> The opportunity that the United States now has before it to place constraints upon arms competition in the broad reaches of outer space is ripe but perishable. The Asat technologies currently available to the United States and the Soviet Union are crude but suggestive. Should the momentum of Asat programs increase, it is evident that the two sides will provoke the other into expending billions of dollars, all in preparation for a "Brobdingnagian skeet shoot" from which neither side is likely to derive a net advantage in security.

So the Air Force's announced willingness to kill the United States Asat slows down the Asat race, and I consider that a good thing. But the larger problem of satellite security is not going to go away unless we negotiate further limits on space weapons with the Soviets. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are aggressively researching other forms of Asat's, including directed energy Asat's and without an agreement it is inevitable such weapons will soon be developed, tested, and deployed.

We should renew negotiations with the Soviets on antisatellite weapon constraints. Possibly this new treaty could ban all tests of Asat's against objects in space. Possibly it could be limited to the development of Asat's capable of attacking higher Earth orbits because of verification problems of stopping lower Earth orbit Asat's.

In the meantime, there are alternatives for the United States to protect itself against the threat of Soviet satellites besides an Asat, and I believe we should move aggressively forward with those alternatives.

United States and Soviet satellites use UHF, SHF, and EHF frequencies. These satellites are susceptible to uplink jamming in varying degrees and may be blinded through ground-based directed-energy weapons or high-power radio frequency transmissions. Instead of developing the U.S. Asat, this approach may be a more cost effective and militarily safe method of stopping an enemy satellite from tracking U.S. ships or engaging in other hostile activity during war.

We should also continue the process of improving the survivability features on U.S. satellites. For example, the Navstar Global Positioning System displays the kind of features, available at reasonable cost, that can make attack much more difficult, time consuming, and conspicuous.

Mr. President, I wish to extend my thanks to the 47 other Senators who joined me in voting this year to extend the moratorium of Asat testing and send a message to the administration and the Defense Department about the Asat, making possible the elimination of this marginal program. I ask that the article "Air Force Proposes Abandoning Anti-Satellite Weapon to Reduce Budget" be placed in its entirety in the RECORD.

The article follows:

AIR FORCE PROPOSES ABANDONING ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPON TO REDUCE BUDGET

(By Richard Halloran)

WASHINGTON. Dec. 17.—To help cut the Pentagon budget, the Air Force has proposed ending work on a weapon system to destroy Soviet satellites in space, Pentagon officials said today.

The officials said the Air Force saw no sense in continuing the program because for three years Congress has forbidden the Air Force to test the system in space. While Frank C. Carlucci, the Defense Secretary, has not yet made a final decision, the official suggested that the anti-satellite weapon program was dead.

Mr. Carlucci, acting under an agreement reached by the White House and Congress to reduce the Federal deficit, has ordered the armed services to cut about $33 billion from their 1989 budgets so that the Defense Department can meet its obligations.

Killing research and development of the weapon would save about $500 million in the fiscal year 1989, which starts next Oct. 1. Although, the Air Force has been instructed to come up with $8.6 billion in budget cuts.

DEMOCRATS FEAR FOR BALANCE

Each service had until late last week to draft its lists of proposed cuts. This week, leaders of each service have been meeting with the Pentagon's executive committee, the Defense Resources Board, to explain and defend recommended cuts.

The anti-satellite system envisions mounting a precision guided missile on a highpowered F-15 fighter. The fighter would climb to a high altitude and launch the missile into an orbit, where it would collide with the satellite or explode near it. Congressional Democrats opposed the program, asserting that it destabilized the military balance between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Representative Les Aspin, Democrat of Wisconsin, has been among the leaders of the opposition to the anti-satellite weapon. Another leader is Senator John Kerry, Democrat of Massachusetts.

THE SOVIET ADVANTAGE

It also seemed likely to please the Soviet Union, which has proposed a moratorium on such developments. The Soviet Union has a military space program that is more extensive than that of the United States; anti-satellite weapons would threaten that network in a conflict.

Moscow has also been seeking to develop an anti-satellite system of its own, but is believed to lag behind the United States technically.

For the United States to cancel its anti-satellite system may slow development of President Reagan's plan to deploy a defense against incoming nuclear missiles. Some anti-satellite technology might have been useful in the antimissile program.

In other budget-cutting actions, the Navy has proposed transferring several destroyers to the reserve fleet, where they would require few sailors on active duty and would be operated infrequently by reserve crews. The Navy could thus reduce personnel and operating costs.

At the same time, the Pentagon officials said, the Navy has amended its proposed cuts to come close to its goal, a $11.5 billion reduction. Earlier, the Navy came up short by nearly $1 billion, and James Webb, the Secretary of the Navy, contended that further reductions would lead to unacceptable military risks.

HOLDING PERSONNEL AT A LEVEL

The Navy has also proposed that it hold level the number of people in the ranks, meaning personnel would not be increased by the 10,000 sailors, as had been planned. Navy officers have long said they needed more people as the American fleet expanded to 600 ships.

The Pentagon officials said the Army had been resisting efforts by the Deputy Secretary of Defense, William Howard Taft 4th, who is acting as chairman of the Defense Resources Board, to reduce the number of soldiers.

Mr. Taft suggested earlier that the Army, which has held its personnel strength constant for seven years, would not be required to make deep cuts. But the Pentagon officials said that did not mean no cuts. The Army, instead, has proposed ending the program to develop a remotely piloted drone to fly over battlefields to spy on enemy forces, relaying information back to a command post through television.

The Army has also recommended reducing its annual procurement of M-1 Abrams tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles, although by how much could not be determined. In 1989, the service planned to buy 600 tanks for $1.6 billion and 618 Bradleys for $714 million.

In a related matter, Donald M. Fredericksen, a senior Defense Department official, told a Congressional committee today that the Army would add armor to the Bradley to make the disputed vehicle "50 percent more survivable" in combat.

Critics have contended that the Bradley could not survive an attack by some Soviet-made missiles. Mr. Fredericksen also said the Army would move the position of ammunition stored aboard the vehicle and redesign the fuel system to protect the crew.●

TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR THE BLIND

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the American Foundation for the Blind. Since opening in 1921, the foundation has served as a national partner of local services for blind and visually impaired persons, services for whom the foundation seeks to develop, maintain, and improve.

Today, with headquarters in New York City, the foundation works in cooperation with more than 1,000 agencies, organizations, and schools nationwide. Together, new opportunities in education and rehabilitation are provided to promote independence for hundreds of thousands of blind and visually impaired persons in the United States.

To fulfill its mandate, AFB offers regional and national consultants on matters ranging from early childhood development and rehabilitation to employment and communications technology. A myriad of publications are available and messages on radio and television are aired to promote public awareness. Local, regional, and national seminars are conducted, including the annual Helen Keller Seminar held in New York City. At the national level, through its Government relations office in the Nation's Capital, AFB consults on legislative issues and represents the foundation before Congress and Government agencies.

A recent development at AFB occurred in January 1986 when the National Technology Center was opened at AFB's New York City headquarters. The center was designed to help meet the specific needs of blind and visually impaired persons in our highly complex technological environment. For their greater independence at home, school, or work, the center has begun an ongoing technological investigation into the development of mobility aids, home-use medical monitoring devices, and general adaptive equipment that help meet the same day-to-day needs as those of sighted people. Consider, for example, computer systems that speak and display information in large print; talking cash registers, calculators, thermometers, and clocks; and paperless braille tactile graphics displays. These include some of the innovative alternatives under evaluation and development at the Center.

The American Foundation for the Blind is always looking for new and better ways to help the blind and visually impaired, made possible by the philanthropy of the general public, corporations, foundations, and governmental grants. IBM recently received AFB's third annual "Corporation of the Year Award" in recognition of the company's commitment to national programs and services for blind and visually impaired persons. John F. Akers, chairman of the board of the IBM accepted the award.

IBM also received the second annual Leadership Award of the Dole Foundation, an organization deeply committed to furthering employment for individuals with all kinds of disabilities. The American people, corporate America, private organizations, and the Federal Government are joined in the belief that people with disabilities are an integral segment of our Nation's work force.

Led by chairman AFB, John S. Crowley, and executive director, William F. Gallagher, AFB's staff, national trustees, and regional advisory boards are to be commended for their dedication and service.

I am pleased to recognize the American Foundation for the Blind. We in Congress, and indeed the American people, are proud of its many accomplishments. I encourage the foundation to keep up the good work.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

RECOGNIZING THE KNOGO CORP.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay special recognition to one company that has grown from a one-man shop to an international leader in the $200 million a year electronic article surveillance industry—the Knogo Corp. on Hauppaugue, Long Island. Knogo is the founder and leader in manufacturing, marketing, and servicing antishoplifting devices to retailers around the world.

In 1966, an inventor tinkering in his Queens' garage pioneered the entire worldwide electronic article surveillance [EAS] industry with the invention of the first radio frequency "wafer." This system was designed to deter and detect shoplifting at the retail level. All of Knogo's antitheft systems work on the same principle: Merchandise is targeted so that, when it passes through Knogo's exit monitor panels in an unauthorized fashion, signals will alert store personnel.

From the humblest beginnings, Knogo has grown by leaps and bounds due to the direction of Arthur J. Minasy, president of Knogo Corp. For 21 years the company has been at the forefront of the EAS industry and providing retailer institutions with the best state-of-the-art technology available.

Knogo is moving with the times and perfecting new ideas. Some of its other systems protect mentally confused patients from straying away from nursing homes, protect works of art in museums, scrub suits and other linens in hospitals, and books and periodicals in libraries.

Knogo has a proven record of success. It experienced a 25-percent increase in revenue last year and is currently in the process of building a 68,000-square-foot facility in Hauppaugue, Long Island. Knogo's leadership in the EAS industry and the new business and employment opportunities it has provided my fellow Long Islanders are just a few of its accomplishments. I am proud of Knogo's progress and extend my congratulations on 21 years of excellence.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

SKATING SKILLS OF MARY DOCTER

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, while we may seem to be skating on thin ice in compiling these mammoth budget and tax bills, I'd like to draw my colleagues attention to the solid skating skills of one of my constituents.

Mary Docter of Madison, WI, has shown remarkable pluck and determination in winning a place for herself on the U.S. Winter Olympic Team. We here in Congress would do well to emulate her perseverance.

Her story is told in an article from the Washington Post of December 21. I ask that it be entered in the Record.

Docter Skates to Berth On U.S. Olympic Team—Rushed Comeback Results in Surprise Win

(By Angus Phillips)

West Allis, Wis., Dec. 20.—Take heart, couch potatoes. You, too, will be represented at the Winter Olympics.

This weekend, in an upset that left her almost as baffled as it did the rest of the speed skating community, Mary Docter, 26, beer and cheesecake queen of Madison, Wis., won a place on the U.S. team. Not just a place either; she proved to be the top women's 3,000-meter and 5,000-meter performer at the Olympic trials here.

This is the Mary Docter who, after finishing sixth in the 1984 Olympics in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, sold her equipment and vowed never to speed skate again, "unless I have a complete personality change."

Docter moved back to Madison went to the University of Wisconsin, ate too much, drank beer, gained weight, speed-skated not a whit and found herself on graduation last May jobless and without prospects.

She took up waitressing part-time at the Ovens of Brittany, where her cheesecake obsession flowered, she said, until the day before Halloween, when a patron scolded her. Docter recounted their fateful chat:

Customer: "Why aren't you skating?"

Docter: "It's out of my life."

"You must be talented."

"It's a lot of work."

"When are the Olympics?"

"Three or four months."

"What would it take?"

"Look, you're stirring a lot of feelings in me that I don't want."

But Docter said she quickly realized "I needed the sport. I wasn't doing anything with my life. I was going out every night, drinking loads of beer and smoking. I was in a rut."

So she intensified the occasional gym workouts she'd been doing, went roller skating on off hours and, when the Madison ice rink opened four weeks ago, strapped on a pair of speed skates for the first time in almost four years.

Entry fee for the Olympic trials here was $10. She watched some of the Olympic hopefuls "and I thought to myself, 'I think I can beat those chicks.' "

In her first race Dec. 13, Docter was second to the top U.S. 3,000-meter skater, Leslie Bader. This weekend she beat Bader by three seconds to become the top U.S. prospect at that distance, then easily won the 5,000-meter trials tonight.

"It makes all of us who trained hard just sick," said Angela Zuckerman, who lost her place on the team because of Docter. "It hurts. The only thing we can think is, she's rested."

Said Bader: "It's amazing, after such a long time. I'm happy for her, but it's hard, deep down. I did all this training and here she just blew me away."

Even Docter conceded it is "a little insulting to the women's distance program."

Coach Mike Crowe initially was distressed that someone without hard training, "skating half-throttle," as he put it, would wind up his best prospect for a medal at 3,000 meters against a strong East German women's contingent.

But this weekend he mellowed. "She definitely belongs on the team," he said after her defeat of Bader in a cold rain Saturday night. "She was far and away better than anyone else [at 3,000 meters]."

Crowe said he suspects Docter has been working out in the gym more than she admits to. But he said he hadn't talked with her during the trials. "I hadn't coached her, so I didn't know if it was my place." Now that she's on the team, he said he'd work with her, which Docter said she'd welcome.

For her part, Docter is both euphoric and bewildered.

"I don't know what's going to happen," said the frizzy-haired veteran of two Olympics. "I'm ready to train hard. I'm excited to come down here and skate."

She said 1984 was a bitter disappointment she wouldn't want to repeat.

After seven years of training, she said, "I didn't get what I trained for. I had great potential, but when the time came I was a mental, physical and emotional wreck. I was eating to much baklava and not sleeping. I couldn't maintain my mental status; my attitude was bad."

Now, she says, "Speed skating is just what I need to get out of my rut. It's the most exciting thing I've ever done."

Nor does she expect to get so wound up that she collapses at Calgary the way she did at Sarajevo. She's approaching this one very differently.

Will 1988 be Mary Docter's revenge?

"No," she said with an ear-to-ear grin, "it will be Mary's vacation."

Although Docter is a long-distance specialist, the top U.S. medal prospects all compete in shorter, sprint distance of 500, 1,000 and 1,500 meters.

The only major surprise of the trials in those distances was three-time Olympian Nancy Swider-Peltz's victory tonight in the 1,000 meters. Like Docter, Swider-Peltz, 31, wasn't planning to compete this year. She had her first child in January and couldn't train until September. By winning tonight, she becomes the first U.S. four-time speed skating Olympian.

In other sprint team selections, women's champion Bonnie Blair and the top men, world record holder Nicky Thometz and Dan Jansen, made the team easily. Thometz was ill and didn't race the 500, but has a designated spot as world-record holder at that distance. Jansen and Blair led the pack in the 500 trials, and Jansen also won the 1,000.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to share with my colleagues two articles, regarding the textile industry. The first, "The Great Textile Robbery," appeared in the New York Times. The second, "Sun Finally Setting on Garment Industry," was printed in the China News. They were brought to my attention by a close friend and leader in the retail industry, Mr. Leslie H. Wexner. Les Wexner is the president and chairman of The Limited, Inc., the largest retailer of women's clothing in the world.

According to these articles, it is estimated that the U.S. textile industry employs 1.8 million workers. Although our domestic industry is diminishing in size, it remains profitable, with income of over $100 billion a year. At this time, U.S. plants are operating close to capacity without large amounts of new investment capital. Furthermore, foreign clothing imports account for only about 30 percent of the American market. In fact, in recent years the industry has experienced increased domestic sales. U.S. buyers have reduced their relliance on foreign manufacturers and are turning to American manufacturers to meet their requirements.

Those in favor of more protection for textiles here in the United States claim that the American textile industry is losing money and no longer able to compete with foreign manufacturers. They promote increased reliance on quotas and tariffs in order to remain competitive.

Frankly, I disagree with this approach. Every year legislation is introduced to protect textile-related jobs. I'm concerned that the only result is to increase clothing costs by $20 million a year. Quite frankly, protecting the textile industry is a vicious circle. Protectionist measures cause clothing costs to rise and domestic sales to fall, hurting the domestic textile industry and putting people out of work.

Mr. President, I ask that both articles be printed in the Record and I encourage my colleagues to read them.

The articles follow:

[From the New York Times, Oct. 26, 1987]

The Great Textile Robbery

It's already an outrage: Quotas and tariffs raise clothing and textile prices in America by a whopping $20 billion a year. That means the public currently pays $86,000 for every job protected.

Now Congress wants to make it worse. Last month, the House voted to allow imports to rise by only a small fraction of the expected growth in demand, and the Senate is expected to go along. According to estimates by William Cline, a researcher at the Institute for International Economics, the added restrictions would double the current consumer cost by the year 2000. The only consolation is that the bill is certain to be vetoed by President Reagan.

The protectionists' case is simple. Apparel and cloth manufacturers employ 1.8 million and generate some $100 billion in income. If imports aren't tightly checked, the industry says, American producers will be unable to compete with foreign companies that pay pennies a day for workers. Even the best-run domestic manufacturers will fail, devastating families and communities.

It's a simple argument but it's disingenuous. In spite of their labor cost disadvantage, highly automated U.S. textile mills have remained competitive in world markets. The mills are currently operating close to capacity, and imports account for only 10 percent of domestic consumption.

Apparel manufacturers, who have invested very little in mechanization, have been pressed by imports. But foreign clothing still has only 30 percent of the American market. And thanks to rapid growth in total demand, domestic sales and profits have never been higher.

The House measure, restricting import growth to 1 percent annually, would check the slow decline in industry employment—but only at an incredible price to consumers. According to Mr. Cline, each of the 179,000 jobs saved would 10 years later add even more to Americans' clothing bills. And seen simply as a make-work program, it's far from clear that those jobs would be worth preserving at any price.

Apparel and textile wages average less than $7 an hour, $2 less than the average private sector wage. Moreover, with unemployment now below 6 percent and labor shortages forecast for the next decade, there is every reason to believe that workers laid off by the industry will be able to find jobs at comparable pay.

A plausible argument can be made for preventing high-tech industries from being overwhelmed by imports. Reasonable people can debate the merits of creating an effective safety net for workers and communities affected if any large employers collapse. But there is no basis for asking Americans to pay tens of billions more to save a relatively small number of poorly paid jobs in highly profitable industries.

Congressional eagerness to pander to the textile and apparel makers is sad evidence of the power of well-organized, big-money lobbying. It's hard to remember when legislation so richly deserved a veto.

SUN FINALLY SETTING ON GARMENT INDUSTRY

The garment industry is about to enter the Dark Ages. Industry sources say total future orders and unit prices are looking "pessimistic."

The industry has forecast a shrinking business volume ever since the NT dollar began to rise against the U.S. dollar last year. Yesterday, industry representatives said the Dark Ages are finally coming.

The most convincing evidence for the grim future, they said, is that export orders received for between April and June next year are only 30 percent of the actual export amount for this year.

The buying will of the American public has diminished with the instability of the stock market, a spokesman of the Garment Maker's Association said.

Buyers from the United States either are buying less or are simply turning their backs on local manufacturers after hearing price quotations on routine visits to Taipei.

Price is another factor causing the industry to recede. Knit wear makers complain they used to sell by the piece. Now, they are requested to quote prices by the dozen.

In view of the bleak outlook, many garment makers are seriously considering transferring factories to the Philippines and Indonesia where labor is cheaper and quota restrictions are less tight.

According to a survey made by the Garment Makers' Association on export orders for the coming six months, shirt makers stand out as they claim to have received orders equivalent to 70 percent of last year's orders. Makers of jackets, one-piece garments, trousers and wind breakers are reporting 40 percent to 50 percent of orders compared to the same period last year.●

OLD MAIN—A SUCCESS STORY

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to share with my fellow Senators a tale of success about a building called "Old Main" in Mankato, MN, from an article in the "Minnesota Real Estate Journal." The Federal Government is often criticized—many times deservedly—for dragging its feet on important decisions. But the story I'd like to share is one of prompt action and cooperation.

"Old Main," which was placed on the National Register in 1983, is the last remnant of the old Mankato State Teachers College. It was built in 1923-24 and is a fine example of the academic style of architecture. Now "Old Main" is being renovated to provide 85 units of senior housing.

I was proud to be at the ground breaking some time ago.

Curt Fisher, of Fisher Commercial Real Estate in Mankato, together with many others, was a leader in the fight to save this building from the wrecking ball. Curt recognized the needs of the community, particularly the need for senior housing, and worked hard with the citizens of Mankato to make the vision a reality. The city of Mankato pitched in by purchasing the building from a developer using proceeds from a tax increment financing (TIF) district, and then selling it to the nonprofit Senior Development Corp.

But it wasn't easy going. Provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, which was signed into law while financing and planning of the renovation was still being worked out, could well have stopped the project. The cut in the historic preservation tax credit from 25 to 20 percent, as well as the limitation on passive losses for partnerships, could have killed the project. I went to work and obtained an amendment to the Tax Reform Act exempting the project and putting it back on track.

I think the story of the renovation of "Old Main," which will be completed by next May, is a fitting example of the benefits of cooperation between private investors, and local, State and Federal Governments. "Old Main" will provide much needed housing for seniors, while preserving the historic heritage of Mankato.●

CHILD CARE SERVICES IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, in supporting S. 1678, the Child Care Services Improvement Act of 1987, a bill that addresses one of the fastest growing problems that our Nation faces. The need for quality child care in this country far outstrips the supply, a reality that all parents of young children struggle with on a daily basis. The poor face the double problem of supply and affordability leading them to take the chances that sometimes result in neglect and tragedy.

Moderate income families often deal with the continuing stress of maintaining adequate child care and also seeing most of their net income going to pay for child care that is less than satisfactory. For all, child care is a constant hassle which affects their work productivity and their mental health which in turn may further affect the quality of time they spend with their children.

Child care has become a national issue for many reasons but the simplest and most obvious is that the number of women who work outside the home as well as in the home has grown dramatically. Simultaneously the number of women in childbearing years has grown. So demand for child care facilities and programs has increased proportionately. The need for quality child care will be with us for many years, so we must move quickly. Already half of all married mothers with infants younger than 1 year are in the work force—a 108 percent increase. By 1995, two-thirds of all preschool children will have mothers in the work force.

Quite literally, the Nation's most precious resource, its children, are being put at risk without safe, mentally and physically nurturing environments. Just as the Nation once long ago determined that public education was something that society and the community should ensure, it is clear that with changing work patterns for women and men, it is in the interests of the Nation to make certain that children are given the right developmental start in life. For later elementary education, there is also evidence among large numbers of disadvantaged children, some of which are growing up homeless, that quality day care gives them a better chance in life—just as Operation Headstart did beginning in the Mid 1960's. In fact, good day care for children in poverty can be an opportunity to partially compensate for cognitive deficits in their environment, nutritional inadequacies in the home, and the absence of health care (especially preventive health care.)

As a nation, we must make this investment in our children. Of today's children, who will make up our future labor force, according to the Children's Defense Fund:

One in four is poor.

One in three is nonwithe, and, of these, 40 percent are poor.

One in five is at risk of becoming a teen parent.

One in seven is at risk of being a drop-out.

There is evidence that preschool and other programs can help low-income children (who often have many barriers to overcome) succeed in school.

Government cannot and should not be the main source of child care, or of its financing. Even if the Nation were not facing large Federal deficits and a crushing national debt that could be left to these same children, parents must contribute to their children's care according to their ability to pay. They have the greatest stake in the care because they are the parents. Parents must remain responsible for ensuring quality care and proper early development. But, it is clear that governments at all levels have roles to play in quality assurance, consumer information and protection, assistance with the vexing liability insurance problem, and as financial catalysts for demonstrations, and significant sources of funds for State programs, and extra assistance to low-income families. Like education, child care is most appropriately a State and local responsibility but the Federal Government can and should help. Parents, concerned citizens, educators, organizations and Government agencies have important distinctive interests and roles and all will need to work together to protect our young people. Moreover, we want to maximize the opportunities for choice—choice of kinds of child care, choice of mixture of financing and choice of governance. But without adequate supply of child care options, there is no real choice. We must stimulate supply expansion and enhance choice for all Americans.

In addition to the broad need for good day care, it is obvious that welfare reform will flounder if we do not move ahead to increase the supply of day care for the young women and men who must get an education or work training to get jobs or need day care to even get the chance to develop a solid work history.

The lack of affordable, decent day care could make a mockery of all of our efforts to develop independence, to provide good training and open the door to economic opportunities. If middle-income mothers with cars and adequate though not lavish salaries have the constant battles with sitters and child care that this Senator hears about, imagine what it must be like with all of the strikes against them that many young mothers on AFDC face. In an excellent project in Hennepin County, in which AFDC mothers are given intensive services to help them cope, many of the welfare recipients barely make it on a daily basis for so many factors that drag them down, including lack of child care and transportation.

Neither this bill nor others that deserve support, such as Senator DODD's "New School Childcare Demonstration Projects Act of 1987" which I also am cosponsoring, will solve all of the child care supply problems that we will face in the next 5 years, but both bills are important, thoughtful steps that must be taken as soon as possible. A year or even 3 years is not long in Congress or for any of us as older adults—indeed the years seem to move much too swiftly—but even a year is a critical period in the development of a child. We cannot let that valuable time for shaping a child be wasted or allow children to have their development stunted or twisted. We must move quickly. I urge my colleagues to join me in working with Senator HATCH to bring this bill to final passage.●

AFTER INF: THE NATO DEFENSE INITIATIVE

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, the benefits of the INF agreement are clear: For the first time the United States and the Soviet Union will actually be eliminating an entire class of nuclear weapons systems. This is why the treaty and its ratification are virtually irresistable.

What's not so well understood, however, is how the elimination of NATO's INF missiles will further undermine NATO's strategy of flexible response and how NATO must now take prudent action to revitalize its defenses. In fact, NATO's strategy is at a crossroads. Either NATO will correct the deficiencies that destruction of its INF missiles will compound or it will let its strategy of flexible response deteriorate until NATO comes undone.

Today I intend to clarify this crisis and propose a 5- to 15-year package of NATO-coordinated programs—the NATO Defense Initiative [NDI]—that can address these problems without bankrupting either us or our allies. I have spoken to the administration about this initiative and believe they should support it either by including all or part of it in the fiscal year 1989 Defense budget or, if this is not possible, by presenting it in the form of a supplemental request prior to the INF Treaty's ratification.

Before I detail the specifics of the NDI package, though, I think it's necessary to clarify the problem it's intended to address—the deterioration of NATO's strategy of flexible response.

This strategy of flexible response has three components:

First, direct or forward conventional defenses to check an initial Soviet conventional assault; second, deliberate escalation with tactical and theater nuclear weapons to deter Warsaw Pact use of nuclear weapons and to block any Pact breakthroughs against NATO's forward conventional defenses; and, third, general nuclear response with theater or strategic nuclear weapons to deter any further aggression by credibly threatening to initiate a nuclear strike against the Soviet Union itself.

Clearly, the last component is the one most directly affected by the elimination of NATO's INF missiles. NATO still has its dual-capable aircraft to deliver nuclear weapons but these are located on only a handful of bases that are becoming increasingly vulnerable to nonnuclear missile and air attacks. These planes also are themselves increasingly vulnerable to Warsaw Pact air defenses.

As for United States nuclear forces based outside of Europe, NATO and the Soviets have every reason to doubt that these forces would be used particularly if the Soviets were winning a limited conventional war against only one or two of NATO's members. Nor is clear that NATO's shorter range battlefield nuclear weapons would be used to block conventional Pact breakthroughs.

Here again, the reason is tied to the capabilities surrendered under INF. NATO's ground-launched cruise missiles and Pershing II's and I's, after all, were also deployed to address the vulnerability, lack of range, and increasing obsolence of NATO's battlefield nuclear forces dual-capable artillery and Lance missile batteries.

The key difficulty with these systems is their lack of range. None of them can shoot much beyond 50 miles and most cannot reach beyond 25 miles. Because they are deployed near the battlefront, they are vulnerable to being overrun in a Soviet assault. Yet, if they are used, they are will be targeted against Soviet units operating within NATO territory—a prospect that argues against these weapons' use.

This finally brings us to NATO's forward or direct conventional defenses, whose own viability turns on the vitality of the other two components of NATO's strategy. Here the credible threat of direct escalation with battlefield and short-range nuclear weapons, is not just desirable for forward defense, it's a prerequisite.

First, it is the credible threat of nuclear escalation that prevents the Pact from concentrating its conventional ground forces in the easiest fashion to launch an attack. The Soviets understand that if they mass their conventional ground forces to achieve a favorable ratio of forces against NATO, they also create a lucrative target that can easily be wiped out with a fairly discriminate, low risk NATO nuclear strike.

Take away the credibility of NATO's threat to target Soviet forces with nuclear weapons, though, and you give the Soviets every incentive to mass their conventional forces as they did so successfully in World War II. In short, you eliminate any hope of being able to deter or win against the pact conventionally.

This is true even if you are somehow able to get the Soviets to agree to reduce to NATO conventional force levels. Again, if the enemy can concentrate his forces at will, he will have an offensive advantage. Thus, in 1940 Hitler was able to prevail against nearly equal French forces despite superior French armor and extensive prepared French defenses.

The point is even more telling in the Soviets' case since as a land power it has the advantage of being able to use interior lines of communication to reinforce its armies whereas the alliance depends on United States forces located an ocean away. While the United States must struggle to introduce additional divisions into Europe from across the Atlantic, the Soviets can move two divisions a day to Western Europe over seven or more East European rail lines.

Even NATO's Follow-on Forces Attack [FOFA] concept, which we are now promoting, assumes NATO's nuclear threat is credible enough to force Pact forces to be dispersed in waves or echelons. The aim of FOFA is to delay or disrupt these echelons' movement toward the battle front sufficiently to stave off an attack or at least to prevent the Soviets from capitalizing on any initial successes against NATO's forward defenses. Remove the credibility of NATO's battlefield nuclear forces and FOFA, even if fully funded, falls as well.

Second, and finally, without modern nuclear forces effective and survivable enough to threaten a credible deliberate nuclear escalation, NATO would be unable to deter pact offensive nuclear assaults. This would only further seal the fate of NATO's conventional forces.

This, then, brings us to what needs to be done and the detail of the three efforts proposed under the NATO Defense Initiative. First, NATO must increase the credibility of its nuclear forces not by increasing their number but by modernizing what it has. Second, NATO must strengthen its forward conventional forces by protecting its air assets against pact air and missile attacks and by giving its ground forces greater battle depth and resilience through longer range improved battlefield fire support. Third, NATO must base its flexible response more on conventional missiles of various ranges than on nuclear weapons of any sort.

NUCLEAR MODERNIZATION

Although each of the efforts independently will strengthen one or another specific components of NATO's strategy, modernizing its nuclear arsenal is critical directly or indirectly to all three components.

What specifically needs to be done to modernize NATO's nuclear weapons? At least four things: First, NATO's nuclear artillery needs to be upgraded with shells of increased accuracy and range. NATO has many 8-inch and 155mm artillery tubes already deployed. Recent advances in electrothermal technology suggest that we could soon have shells that could increase NATO's artillery range severalfold.

This would allow NATO to move these artillery units further back in less vulnerable positions than where they are currently deployed. Also, with extended range, NATO artillery will be able to concentrate its fire easier. This, in turn, should reduce the need for nuclear shells.

Second, NATO needs to develop and deploy a longer range follow-on to the now obsolete Lance ground-launched nuclear missile system. This replacement should extend close to the very edge of the INF range limits—499 kilometers—and should be made dual-capable. This later characteristic should increase the weapon's value in conventional conflict and again reduce the need for more nuclear shells—if the Soviets are faced with many dual capable missiles, NATO does not need to deploy as many nuclear shells to assure their survivability.

Third, NATO needs to make whatever dual-capable aircraft it has more survivable on the ground and against Warsaw Pact air defenses.

Finally and related to the previous point, NATO needs to replace its nuclear gravity bombs with air-to-surface nuclear standoff missiles that will increase the survivability of its dual-capable aircraft by allowing these planes to deliver their weapons without having to fly over the target's air defenses.

Each of these efforts when taken in conjunction to reassigning existing United States strategic nuclear warheads to NATO missions will go a long way to keep its overall strategy intact. It will not, however, take the place of additional conventional improvements. The reason why is simple: the Soviets have theater nuclear weapons too. Unlike the 1950's when NATO had a relative monopoly in theater nuclear weapons, NATO can no longer plan to use nuclear weapons to block a Soviet conventional success without bringing on a more devastating nuclear response within Europe.

Nuclear weapons will still be useful. They can help couple NATO's defense to a strategic nuclear exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union. They can assure that the Warsaw Pact will not risk concentrating their conventional forces as they did in offensives during the Second World War. And they can help deter Soviet use of nuclear weapons against NATO.

They can do all these things. But they can do no more. If NATO wishes to prevent the pact from breaking though NATO's forward defenses, it must strengthen its forward defenses conventionally. Similarly, if NATO wishes to deter or stop persistent Pact offensives without dragging the alliance into a nuclear strategic exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union, it can no longer count on nuclear weapons, but must develop a conventional flexible response to do the job.

STRENGTHENING NATO'S FORWARD DEFENSES

What does this mean in specific? To strengthen NATO's conventional forward defenses at least three specific efforts are required. First, NATO must improve its passive ground defenses to absorb the shock of an intitial pact ground assault. Work that has now begun to develop pre-prepared terrain enhancements and barriers must continue. This can help slow and channel initial Pact armor attacks.

Second, NATO must deploy relatively deep battlefield weapons that can rapidly and precisely place mine fields to block further Soviet armor and advances and mass firepower to help keep these advances blocked. Also, by at least doubling or tripling the range of such fire units, NATO will be able to double or triple the battle depth in which NATO forward defense units are deployed. This, in turn, should increase the resiliency of NATO's forward defenses by giving them more room to manuever and counter atttack against a focused pact assault.

The weapons in question would include munitions compatible with systems such as the Multiple Launch Rocket System, which is now being deployed; ATACM missiles now under production; JTACM missiles that soon will be deployed; shorter range modular standoff weapons, a NATO cooperative cruise missile that could soon go into production; dual-capable aircraft; smart extended range artillery shells; and the like.

Third, NATO must extend defense of its air assets, which ultimately are dedicated to supporting NATO's efforts on the ground. Currently, our air fields, air defense batteries, and air control centers lack adequate defenses against nonnuclear pact air forces and tactical missiles such as the SCUD and the SS-21. If NATO allow this vulnerability to continue to grow, it will have to plan on losing control of the air, which, in turn, would make any conventional defense of Europe impossible.

In the near-term NATO must address this concern with improved passive defenses such as hardening and decoys to protect both our airplanes and air defense units. It also must upgrade existing Patriot and Hawk air defense batteries and begin work in earnest on an active low-cost antitactical missile defense.

In the longer term, NATO will have to deploy an extended air defense system capable of coping not only with low-flying cruise missiles, but tactically ballistic missiles as well. It also must consider how it might reduce its reliance on airplanes by assigning unmanned systems for certain air defense and air interdiction missions.

DEPLOYING A FLEXIBLE CONVENTIONAL RESPONSE

NATO's direct or forward defense, of course, will only be as good as its backup. As noted before, NATO's current strategy is to back its forward defense forces with the threat of deliberate nuclear escalation, a threat that is no longer very credible. The answer to this problem is not to build more nuclear weapons but rather to develop a flexible conventional response that will allow NATO to halt a Soviet attack without destroying the territory NATO is trying to defend.

In specific, NATO must deploy nonnuclear cruise missiles launched from the air, sea, and land to strike deep against pact airfields, air defense units, command and control bunkers, train transloading spots, nuclear depots, and military transport choke points such as tunnels, bridges, and train lines and to jam and confound pact command, control and communications. The focus here would not be on moving targets, such as armor, but rather on the fixed assets these moving targets depend upon to get where they want to go.

The missiles NATO would need to do this job could carry chemical warheads, electronic jammers, antiradiation homing devices, scatterable mines, earth penetrating warheads, fuel air explosives, antiarmor munitions, runway busters, or other improved conventional payloads. They would have ranges of at least 100 kilometers and go beyond 1,000 kilometers. They would include, longer range modual stand off weapons, existing and improved conventional Tomahawk land attack missiles [TLAM-C's], conventional air launched cruise missiles [ALCM-C's], antiradiation missiles such as Tacit Rainbow, remotely piloted drones for surveillance and antiradar missions [RPV's], a dual-capable Lance surface-to-surface missile follow-on and the like.

To make sure that these missiles arrived on target on time in the right number, NATO would also have to develop and adapt its command, control, communication and intelligence network to take on this task.

COSTS AND COOPERATION

None of these upgrades will be free. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that they will bankrupt the alliance particularly when it is understood that the costs of the NDI will be spread over a 15-year period. The most expensive component of the NDI package—the deployment of a conventional flexible response capability and the forward defense improvements—could be done for no more than 5 percent of what NATO will spend on its defense over the next 15 years—$75 billion—and would in all likelihood cost much less.

As for the nuclear modernization, these were already agreed to in principle by NATO at Montebello in 1983. Moreover, savings that might be achieved by pulling out our INF missiles could be used to cover these costs.

Given the importance of these improvements, it may be necessary to cover these costs by cutting other less critical accounts or by making modest increases in defense spending, which is now declining. In any case, they ought not to be made without burden sharing within the alliance. The United States ought to fence money for a good number of the NDI buys pending NATO nations' willingness to chip in.

What should the specifics of such burden sharing be for these off-the shelf or nearly developed weapons systems? How many of what weapons within the NDI package should be bought when? In the first instance, not Congress but rather our Secretary of Defense should supply the answers. In a sense he is already bound to do this in at least two places: The upcoming annual Defense Department report, which must consider NATO's security requirements and in the Defense authorization report on requirements for maintaining NATO's strategy of deterrence requested by myself and the majority leader, which is due when the INF Treaty is submitted to Congress.

With the Secretary's recommendations before us, Congress could cooperate in offering its own suggestions and revisions. One way or another, however, a package of NDI programs will be recommended.

I believe the package I have presented is the one that is needed to revitalize the alliance. It will make NATO's strategy of flexible response reasonable again and yet reduce NATO's reliance on nuclear weapons. It will reduce the likelihood of a pact breakthrough of NATO's forward defenses and make it possible to disrupt any breakthrough without having to resort to nuclear weapons. Finally, by modernizing and integrating NATO's nuclear weapons with its conventional forces to assure continued dispersion of pact conventional forces, it should make any conventional arms control effort less risky than it otherwise might be.

Mr. President, I believe if we are serious about our defense after the INF Treaty and about moving away from so heavy a reliance on nuclear weapons, the NDI is the proper course to take. Indeed, in the end, the costs of taking any course would only be higher, and could easily cost us our alliance as well. Certainly, without the improvements I have outlined, the INF Treaty could easily prove to be a liability rather than a boom to NATO's security.●

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 12 NOON

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business, it stand in recess until the hour of 12 noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, no more work remains to be done unless there is something that can be disposed of by unanimous consent. There will be an adjournment resolution. There may be a 1-day continuing resolution. We will be in at 12 noon.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield, I think there could be a 1-day extension.

I guess the House has gone out until tomorrow morning. I think the only reason for that would be if anybody has a question, it would be to give the administration some time to look over that 2,300-page bill without shutting down the Government. But notices have gone out.

So I assume, at least until some action is taken, for all practical purposes nonessential employees will not be working tomorrow.

But I do want to thank the majority leader for the outstanding work and his efforts.

We will be back in, I guess, briefly tomorrow morning.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Mr. President, the adjournment resolution will provide for adjourning over from Tuesday, today, and during the day we will, I am sure, hear from the President as to whether or not he can give us assurance that he will not veto either of these measures. And there are a few resolutions we will pass tomorrow, one notifying the President that the Senate has finished its business, and some such.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business tonight, I move in accordance with the order previously entered that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 12 noon, Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 3:37 a.m., the Senate recessed until Tuesday, December 22, 1987, at 12 noon.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PRESIDENT CARTER ON HUMAN RIGHTS

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, December 10 marked the 39th anniversary of the adoption by the U.N. General Assembly of a very important document on human rights: the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

To commemorate that day, many organizations have held special gatherings. An important one took place in Atlanta, GA, at the site of the Carter Presidential Center of Emory University. The center also houses the Carter-Menil Human Rights Foundation, established in 1986, to promote the protection of human rights throughout the world. Created by Jimmy Carter and philanthropist Dominique de Menil, the foundation supports the human rights program of the center and presents an annual human rights prize to one or two organizations or individuals for courageous work to further human rights.

The center made its 1987 award of $100,000 to La Vicaria de la Solidaridad. Founded in January 1976 by Cardinal Raul Silva Henriquez, then archbishop of Santiago, the Vicaria provides legal assistance to political prisoners and social welfare assistance to the families of victims of human rights violations. It also collects and disseminates information about specific human rights abuses. Over the last decade, the Vicaria has responded to nearly 400,000 requests for assistance, applied for 8,000 writs of habeas corpus, and provided legal assistance in more than 7,000 judicial proceedings. It has gained worldwide respect for its nonviolent commitment to the defense of human rights in Chile and has been an inspiration and model for human rights organizations throughout the world. Both leaders and members of the Vicaria have exhibited unusual courage in their struggle to end human rights violations in Chile.

Following the presentation of the award, former President Carter delivered an address on the state of human rights that I want to share with you and commend to your attention. Congratulations to the Vicaria, to the Carter-Menil Human Rights Foundation, and to President Carter for his continuing commitment to international human rights.

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT CARTER

While Hitler's armies dominated Europe, 6 million Jews were killed; the world remained mostly silent. While Joseph Stalin eliminated 10 million of his fellow countrymen, the world was mostly silent.

There was no lack of noble ideals being expressed by our leaders. President Franklin D. Roosevelt was calling for "a world founded upon four essential human freedoms." These he identified as "freedom of speech and expression," "freedom of every person to worship God in his own way," "freedom from want," and "freedom from fear." In the meantime, the horrible crimes continued.

There is no doubt that, since the Second World War, awareness of these atrocities has changed the attitude of the international community in dealing with human rights violations. The old order habitually characterized human rights issues as matters of domestic concern, permitting each nation to treat its citizens as it saw fit and branding inquiries or criticisms by outsiders as unlawful intervention. This legal doctrine kept the curtain of silence securely drawn around these crimes and prevented exposure and condemnation by other countries.

The United Nations Charter was written with knowledge of the holocaust, its words expressing the world's concerns about human rights and making the promotion of freedom a matter of international concern. Then, 3 years later, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted. This document evolved into the magna carta of humankind and gave birth to the Genocide Convention, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the U.N. Racial Convention, various international human rights treaties, and other specialized instruments.

During the same time, Harry S. Truman, expressed the standards for our Nation:

"The attainment of worldwide respect for essential human rights is synonymous with the attainment of world peace. The people of the world want a peaceful world, a prosperous world, and a free world, and where the basic rights of men everywhere are observed and respected, there will be such a world. On us as a nation rests the responsibility of taking a position of leadership in the struggle for human rights. We cannot turn aside from the task if we wish to remain true to the vision of our forefathers and the ideals that have made our history what it is."

These eloquent declarations concerning oppression and evil have brought hope to many victims and inspired those who resisted the advance of totalitarianism.

Although the treaties and agreements are frequently violated, they have legitimized the international human rights debate, enabling the United States and other countries to condemn violations of human rights wherever they may occur. All signatories of the U.N. Charter have pledged themselves to observe and to respect basic human rights. Thus, no member of the United Nations can claim that mistreatment of its citizens is solely its own business. To speak out on behalf of human rights in Chile, Cuba, Kampuchea, Haiti, Iran, the Soviet Union, El Salvador, and in areas long occupied by military power is no longer considered an intervention in the domestic affairs of these countries. Other nations have never been reluctant to criticize violations of human rights in our country. International law of today recognizes that how a government treats its own citizens is of concern to other countries; it affects the international community as a whole.

This willingness to expose and prevent violations of human rights has led to the development of nongovernmental national and international human rights organizations. La Vicaria de la Solidaridad is one notable example. Others include Amnesty International, Americas Watch, Helsinki Watch, the International League for Human Rights, and the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights. These organizations, the human rights watchdogs of the world, now have the legal and political legitimacy they need to function.

As the world community recognized more than four decades ago, peace and human rights are closely interconnected. Humanity's yearning for peace and freedom cuts across ideological boundaries and unites the human family. One cannot long exist without the other. Today, the anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, provides a special opportunity for us to reflect on the state of human rights in the world.

In the 39 years that have elapsed since the Universal Declaration was adopted, much has been achieved in the United States. Courageous civil rights leaders were successful in their fight to end racial discrimination and legally authorized segregation of the races. We still have a long way to go in fulfilling the need of our people for housing, health care, full employment, and equal opportunity, but there is no doubt that we have made great progress.

In the early 1970's, our Congress adopted the first of many laws tying U.S. economic and military aid to the human rights records of recipient nations and requiring the executive branch to monitor the human rights performance of these countries. When I became President, I not only encouraged these congressional initiatives, but made the promotion of human rights a cornerstone of our foreign policy. We created a strong Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs in the State Department, instructed all of our Ambassadors to monitor human rights observance in the nations where they served, and directed that American Embassies around the world be havens for victims of abuse from their own governments.

Other nations, particularly the Western democracies, joined us in this commitment. Today many of these governments have developed their own human rights organizations and adopted supporting legislation. Most of these countries have signed the major international human rights instruments that I named earlier. As President, I sent four of these treaties to the U.S. Senate for ratification. Unfortunately, the Senate has yet to act on these requests.

Despite lack of concerted action, the international community at least sees the protection of human rights as a critical issue, and there is now a legal, institutional and political framework to advance it. The main problem is not a lack of laws. The problem is that we do not support the ones we have. Enforcement is feeble and selective at best.

The colonial empires that blanketed the map of Africa and parts of Asia, with their economic exploitation and massive violations of human rights, have largely disappeared. But apartheid has elevated bigotry to a shameful ideology of hate and oppression. Apartheid survives with the tacit acceptance of nations unwilling to surrender their economic ties to the racist regime in South Africa.

The Gulag, in which millions of people died under Stalin and his successors, appears to be giving way to a more open society, but at the same time many Soviet citizens are denied the right to emigrate so that their families can be united.

In Latin America human rights heroes are struggling to transform a region of dictatorial regimes into nations committed to freedom and democracy, but oppression continues in Paraguay, Chile, Cuba, and Haiti.

That the international community has still not learned how to prevent and punish genocide was made apparent by the horrors of Pol Pot in Kampuchea.

Although various international commissions and committees have been established to promote the observance of human rights, the brutal fact is that none of these institutions has yet lived up to its potential.

The United States was one of the first nations to promote the development of international human rights law, it has to date ratified no major human rights treaty. There are only a handful of countries—South Africa is one of them—that have as poor a record on this subject as our own.

This does not mean, of course, that we are serious violators of human rights. It does not mean that our efforts to promote human rights are hampered. By failing to ratify these conventions we weaken the very international institutions that have become the strongest defenders of human rights. Furthermore, the countries we criticize for violations question our authority since we have refused to accept the obligations we ask them to honor.

Some years ago I declared that human rights must be the soul of American foreign policy if we are to be true to our beliefs; that any other course would violate the moral and political commitment of the American people to freedom and human dignity. It is clear that in recent years our leaders have lowered the emphasis on human rights.

The United States is seriously in default on its payment of dues, both to the United Nations and to the Organization of American States. As a result, these organizations are close to bankruptcy. The shortage of funds has had a catastrophic impact on the activities of their human rights institutions. It is imperative, therefore, that our country comply with its financial obligations to the U.N. and the O.A.S.

Our commitment to human rights must always be clear, consistent, indisputable, and unequivocal. The United States must guard against neglect of this issue from either the White House or the Congress. We need a permanent human rights review body in the State Department, and an advocate general whose duty it would be to report to Congress any apparent violations by our Government of international law.

We should strengthen the United Nations in every way possible and revive the long-dormant Costa Rican proposal for the establishment of the office of U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights. Such a position, modeled on the office of the High Commissioner for Refugees, is needed to give this effort the institutional importance and high international visibility required for the effective performance of its functions. The High Commissioner should be given specific powers to deal with serious violations of human rights.

Our definition of human rights should not be too narrow. People have a right to fill vital economic needs—to be fed, housed, clothed, and educated. Civil and political rights must be protected—freedom of speech, thought, assembly, travel, and participation in Government. The rights of personal integrity are the most obvious of all—freedom from arbitrary arrest or imprisonment, torture, or murder by one's own government.

Our humanity requires that we protest whenever violations of human rights occur anywhere, but our effectiveness in moving the world toward more humane treatment of people requires that we make some distinctions. The most serious human rights violations involve attacks on the rights of people to life and freedom.

Torture is still used on a massive scale by governments around the world. In South Africa, even children—many hundreds of them—have been imprisoned and tortured by a government whose cruel apartheid policies have justly earned it world-wide condemnation. The practice of forced disappearances, a euphemism for murder, which was ultimately exposed in Argentina and Brazil, continues in some Latin American countries and elsewhere. Not only are police and military officials practicing or tolerating the use of torture and murder, but there is strong evidence to suggest the active collaboration of attorneys and physicians, which is a shameful perversion of professions sworn to justice and healing.

Wars and civil violence in Afghanistan, the Persian Gulf, the Middle East, Asia, Latin America, and Africa cost hundreds of thousands of lives annually. The survivors cry out for help. There are millions of refugees—injured, hungry, and homeless people—in these regions. This is a vast human tragedy.

One-party, oppressive regimes of the left and right dominate Africa and the Middle East, and still exist in Asia and Latin America. The Soviet Union and its satellites and the People's Republic of China systematically deny basic civil and political rights to individuals and groups alike. Most of these countries tolerate no political dissent, deny freedom of expression, and severely limit freedom of movement and travel.

When authoritarian and totalitarian systems of government display signs of liberalization, as seem to be occurring with "Glasnost" in the Soviet Union and progress toward free elections in South Korea, these trends should be encouraged by the international community.

The best assurance that fundamental personal rights will be respected is within democratic systems where people can replace their leaders peacefully by secret ballot and where independent courts can prevent the arbitrary use of power. The initial signs of transition toward democracy in Haiti were welcome, but that country has recently suffered a setback by inaction or outright obstruction of elections by the military government. The international community must support the provisional electoral commission as the only guarantor of electoral freedom for Haitians.

A similar need exists for free elections in Chile, where citizens have long cried out for the right to choose their own leaders, to escape oppression, and to shape the destiny of their nation.

The sweep of democracy across Latin America in the last decade is a source of joy for all us, but many of these new democracies are still fragile and face serious human rights dilemmas. The question of whether to give amnesty to those who murdered or "disappeared" others is a most difficult one for these new democracies. The heavy burden of external debt prevents the alleviation of poverty, homelessness, and starvation.

Even long-standing democracies suffer from human rights problems. Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza are now in their 21st year of living under military occupation, deprived of political and economic rights. Some Israeli leaders are eagerly seeking a peace agreement with their neighbors that would end human rights abuses in the occupied territories; others are not so concerned about this tragedy.

The United States finds itself among a diminishing group of nations that impose the death penalty on children. Recently the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ruled that by engaging in this practice our nation was in plain violation of its international human rights obligations. It is worth noting, in this connection, that while our own resort to executions is on the increase, most countries of Western Europe have recently signed an international agreement outlawing the death penalty altogether.

The recent riots by Cuban prisoners offered a tragic reminder of a misuse of U.S. law. If those Cubans had been permitted a fair review of their cases by an independent body, as the eventual agreement produced, we would have been spared the terrible tragedy of the past weeks.

South Africa should be high on our agenda for the new year. Given the worsening human rights situation there, it is clear that the United States and other nations must develop a stronger policy, including a broad range of economic sanctions, to compel South Africa to end apartheid and to withdraw from its unlawful occupation of Namibia.

Present and former world leaders should join in a solemn effort to stop the widespread practice of torture and forced disappearances. As a first step, the United States and all other nations should ratify the U.N. and O.A.S. treaties outlawing torture.

International organizations of lawyers and medical doctors should commit themselves to exposing and stamping out these crimes about which some of their fellow practioners almost always have special knowledge.

We need closer coordination among nongovernmental human rights organizations and the national and international groups that share the same purposes.

People of all ages should be educated about the vital subject of human rights. The inseparable link between human suffering and wars of revolution must be more clearly understood.

We are honoring the Vicaria today for its courageous work as a human rights monitor. Its own tragic experience and those of other human rights champions prove that the international community must begin to think about a formal system to protect and confer immunity on these organizations to permit them to discharge their important work. Jacobo Timerman recently called the Vicaria the conscience of Chile. Together, human rights monitors can serve as the world's conscience. Their protection is a moral obligation and political duty of us all.

We at the Carter Center commit ourselves to explore with foreign and American policy makers and human rights experts the implementation of these strategies.

Our Government has a responsibility to raise these issues again and again, even as we work to improve relations and to negotiate difficult issues like arms control. Unless we acknowledge the full range of issues that separate our two nations, any summit euphoria will be short lived.

Among the most pressing and difficult issues is the treatment of Jews within the Soviet Union, and the right of Soviet Jews to emigrate.

While the General Secretary attempted to gloss over these issues, the fact is that even under Gorbachev, Jews continue to face intense persecution in the Soviet Union, and tens of thousands of Jews are still denied the right to emigrate.

For 4 years I served as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Human Rights. During that time, I held dozens of hearings on Soviet Jewry, refuseniks, and religious persecution in the Eastern bloc, and I continue to focus much of my time in these areas.

Soviet officials boast about freedom of religion, yet today there are fewer than 60 operating synagogues in the Soviet Union, a nation of more than 3 million practicing Jews. Anti-Jewish propaganda is officially promoted in party-controlled publications.

The publication of Jewish history is extremely restricted. Jews are singled out by "nationality" on their internal passports.

Even the teaching of Hebrew is a crime, punishable by imprisonment, in the Soviet Union. From September 1984 to February 1985, 11 Jews were arrested and 4 were sentenced to labor camps during a Moscow crackdown on Hebrew teachers and other Jewish cultural activists. During Gorbachev's first months in office, from March to October 1985, an average of one Hebrew teacher per month was jailed.

On the question of emigration, there are still 11,000 refuseniks who have applied for emigration—some have risked persecution and jail by applying over and over again—only to be refused permission. While emigration is up slightly under Gorbachev, today's level is still far below historic levels.

Soviet emigration levels fluctuated between 13,000 and 34,000 during the 1970's, reaching an alltime high of 51,300 in 1979. Since then, however, Soviet emigration has fallen precipitously, to 21,000 in 1980, 9,400 in 1981, and a record low 896 in 1984. During the first 6 months of 1987, emigration has rebounded to an annual rate of roughly 6,000, but this is nowhere near pre-1980 levels.

Four hundred thousand Jews wish to leave the Soviet Union—that number is the most important measure of Soviet performance on human rights and emigration policy.

In the early 1970's, Western sources learned that the Soviet Union had begun to levy high educational fees on all Soviet citizens wishing to emigrate for permanent residence in non-Communist countries. Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson of my own State of Washington and Congressman Charles Vanik passed legislation to prohibit favorable trade treatment—most-favored-nation status—for any "nonmarket" economy country which denies its citizens the right to emigrate or imposes on their emigration more than nominal exit visa or other fees.

While the Soviet Union attempted to justify these fees as repayment for the free education received by all Soviet citizens, these fees ran into tens of thousands of dollars and had the practical effect of blocking emigration for many Jews and other Soviet citizens.

More recently, congressional concern over both emigration and broader human rights issues in Romania led both the House and Senate to include provisions in their 1987 omnibus trade bills which would suspend Romania's most-favored-nation status for at least 6 months.

Given the wide disparity of annual Soviet emigration figures since the mid-1970's, it is difficult to assess the effectiveness of United States trade policy in leveraging a more forthcoming Soviet emigration policy. From time to time we hear calls for repeal or weakening of the Jackson-Vanik amendment.

I do not believe our Nation should be considering any changes that would loosen or remove the Jackson-Vanik sanctions.

At a time when the Soviet Union still maintains harsh restrictions on emigration, any move to lift or loosen Jackson-Vanik would send exactly the wrong signal to the Soviets.

Mr. Speaker, the House Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, which I chair, has jurisdiction over the use of economic sanctions to achieve foreign policy objectives. Earlier this year, I conducted hearings on trade relations with the Eastern bloc. One of the most persuasive statements at these hearings came from Pamela Brown Cohen, national president of the Union of Councils on Soviet Jewry, who told the subcommittee:

> The history of our human rights and Jewish emigration movements tell us that Soviet behavior can be modified whenever they have important needs of the West—especially the United States—and whenever they have clear evidence that our security, trade, and/or economic policies are linked to their emigration and human rights performance. These conditions existed in 1979, and they exist again today.

Jackson-Vanik is a symbolic cornerstone of American human rights policy. In today's atmosphere of hope and extensive United States-Soviet interaction, we should use whatever leverage we have to demonstrate to the Soviets our persistent concern for progress in the areas of human rights, religious persecution, and emigration.

BOLIVIA'S RELATIONS WITH THE PLO

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, relations between the United States and Bolivia today are good. President Paz has tried to stop the flow of narcotics from the country, coordinating with U.S. efforts. In the past year, despite the enormous revenues drug trafficking could mean for Bolivia's troubled economy, the President has overseen the destruction of 1,000 hectares of coca. Accordingly, the Government of Bolivia received $56 million in United States ecocnomic aid in fiscal year 1987. For 1988, Congress will appropriate aid totaling $99.5 million.

However, I call to the attention of my congressional colleagues a troubling development in Bolivia's foreign policy. In April of this year, the Government granted official diplomatic status to the Palestine Liberation Organization, Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal striking a deal with the PLO. It is widely reported that $1 million or more was exchanged for official status. This includes PLO's use of diplomatic license plates, use of the diplomatic pouch, and the like. The PLO's policy of terror is well-known in Bolivia, as well as around the world.

Secretary of State Shultz called Minister Bedregal on this development, expressing the view that his pro-PLO positioning is directly counter to U.S. interest. The Minister promised to downgrade the relationship. His idea of fulfilling that promise, however, was only to take away the PLO's diplomatic license plates for several days. The American Ambassador to Bolivia, Adyard Royell, has expressed the deep concern of the United States to President Paz. To date, however, nothing has changed. If in the PLO Bolivia has found an alternative source of foreign aid, such that Bolivia's Foreign Minister can ignore our concerns, perhaps this Congress over the next several months should look into reducing or eliminating our aid to Bolivia.

Mr. Speaker, this is one elected official who will be watching carefully to see if Bolivia corrects its unwise foreign policy.

UNITIZATION LEGISLATION

HON. W.J. (BILLY) TAUZIN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, a problem has arisen between the State of Louisiana and the Federal Government concerning oil and gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf. This is a problem that is very likely to arise with every coastal State so long as the Department of the Interior pursues its current—and new—policy toward cooperation with the coastal States. This problem should not have occurred and it is within the power of the Secretary to resolve—but appears headed for a legislative solution.

Mr. Speaker, long ago this Congress and the Federal Government established the policy that we should develop our Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas resources in an orderly and environmentally sound fashion. The Congress adopted the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act which authorized and directed the Secretary of the Interior to employ modern conservation practices on the Federal OCS, such practices include unitization where appropriate to prevent waste, protect the environment, and protect the property rights of the various lessees and the States and Federal Government. Oil and gas producing States, including Louisiana, also long ago established modern conservation practices that include a process for the unitization of commonly held oil and gas reserves. The Congress, it should be noted, directed the Secretary of the Interior in section 5 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act to cooperate with the States in the enforcement of State conservation laws.

Mr. Speaker, Congress and the various coastal States have adopted modern conservation practices to avoid the effects of the "law of capture" that governed oil and gas production in the early days of this Nation. Under that rule, oil producers drilled rigs side by side and pumped oil reserves out as quickly as possible—because the law of capture granted ownership to the person that drew the oil to the surface first. The result was damage to the oil reservoirs which left some of our precious oil reserves in the ground forever—and widespread environmental damage where oil was dumped in streams and holding ponds while tanks were built to accommodate the excess. Clearly, as both Federal and State policymakers came to understand, this system of law had to change.

Over the last 30 years, the Gulf of Mexico has been the site of our most prolific offshore oil and gas development. Inevitably, resources were developed that underplay both the State and Federal portions of the Outer Continental Shelf. In over 140 cases, the State of Louisiana and the Federal Government reached voluntary agreements for the cooperative development of these resources. The result has been logical oil and gas development with a minimum of drilling.

Unfortunately, that spirit of cooperation appears to be breaking down. The Department of the Interior has steadfastly refused to either unitize or reach a cooperative development agreement covering a gas field on the Louisiana OCS. The result has been significant and continuing drainage of gas reserves that lie under the State's portion of the OCS, to the detriment of both the State and the State's lessees. The result will either be a tragic injustice to the State and its lessees or unnecessary and potentially damaging drilling in State waters to offset the drainage by the Federal Government. As hard as it is to believe in this era of increased environmental sensitivity, the Department of the Interior appears to have reestablished the law of capture in its relationship with the coastal States.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation I am introducing today creates an independent factfinding process for the resolution of these problems between the Federal Government and the coastal States. Where this process determines that unitization is appropriate, then the legislation provides for mandatory unitization. My colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana, who serves as chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, has introduced identical legislation in the Senate. We are hopeful that this problem will be resolved by agreement between the Secretary and the State of Louisiana and that such an agreement can be a precedent for similar problems with other States. If not, then we will make every effort to enact this legislation.

DEMOCRACY TAKES A DRAMATIC STEP IN KOREA

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the recent elections in the Republic of Korea were one of the most significant political events in the Eastern Hemisphere during 1987. The elections were planned and carried out with great dignity and confidence by the diverse political parties active in the Republic, and the process proved to be a dramatic step forward for democracy in a nation which, though enormously successful, lacks a long tradition of popular rule.

Because our Congress and the American people took strong interest in the elections, I am pleased that a member of my staff had the opportunity to witness the voting process at first hand. I would like the RECORD of today to include his summary report. Dr. Christopher C. Harmon is my legislative aide for foreign policy, and he traveled to Korea under the auspices of the National Republican Institute for International Affairs.

The summary report follows:

STATEMENT BY DR. HARMON

The voting system established by the major political parties and the Central Election Management Committee was professional, and seemed to provide for sufficient oversight by opposition and press. At polling and ballot counting stations, the mood was businesslike and calm. Only at the latter was the presence of security personnel conspicuous, and I personally heard no charges of obstruction or intimidation. Citizens seem satisfied that the electoral processes of December 16 and 17 reflected the will of the people. I doubt that charges of fraud have persuaded the average Korean that the election system failed.

Such were my impressions from a very limited stay in the Republic of Korea during the several days surrounding the presidential elections. I gathered those impressions in visits to polling places in Inchon, Youido, and Seoul, at a ballot counting station in Seoul, from "exit polling" of voters, and from conversations with students and other interested parties, both Korean and foreign.

I heard and discussed a variety of allegations of fraud and abuse, which by no means were focused solely on the activities of the governing party. Some of the charges may indeed prove to be true. Certain others clearly appeared to be without foundation. I heard none which dissuaded me from a judgment that the process was generally smooth and genuinely competitive, and yielded a margin of victory so large as to transcend what cases of unfairness there may have been.

I left the R.O.K. extremely encouraged by the nation's dramatic step along the path of democratic politics. The presidential balloting, like the National Assembly elections which preceded and will follow it, give every cause for optimism. The Koreans, and democratic peoples the world over, will doubtless be watching to see whether the new government holds true to its candidate's promises of openness, conciliation, and good will. It would also seem that the opposition, divided in the campaign and defeated at the polls, owes the Korean people no less a duty to foster reconciliation.

SALUTE TO AMALGAMATED BANK OF NEW YORK

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleagues' attention to an article about the Amalgamated Bank of New York which appeared in the December 14, 1987, edition of the Wall Street Journal. The Amalgamated Bank was founded in 1923 by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the precursor of the Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Union [ACTWU]. The Amalgamated Bank proves that a bank can be fair to consumers, small savers, and working men and women, and still make a reasonable profit. The Journal's report follows:

LABOR LENDING—HOW A UNION SURVIVES IN BANKING BY PUSHING SERVICES OVER PROFITS

AMALGAMATED BANK PITCHES FREE CHECKING AND SHUNS RISK, THEN NEEDLES RIVALS—SLOW DANCE IN THE CONGA LINE

(By Robert L. Rose)

NEW YORK.—When Amalgamated Bank of New York introduced a free checking account last fall, it wasn't content to quitely inform its customers. The bank brought an ad opposite the editorial page in the New York Times and asked: "Why is free checking only for those who can afford to pay for it?"

The bank's inclination to tweak its big corporate rivals isn't surprising. Amalgamated is a union bank, founded in 1923 by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and still owned by the 284,000 members of its successor, the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers.

Heralded as the wave of the future by labor leaders earlier in the century, labor banking was a flop. Out of some 36 labor banks founded in the 1920s, only Amalgamated in New York and Brotherhood Bank & Trust in Kansas City, Kan., survive as labor-owned institutions.

Now, with some labor experts predicting a comeback in union membership and influence, Amalgamated provides one of the oldest examples of a kind of labor-owned business that may multiply. In the past several years, about half a dozen new labor banks have opened, and more are on the way. Like the clothing workers who started Amalgamated, other unions see a chance to own a bank friendly to their members' needs and find new investment outlets for their growing assets.

A ROGUE BANK

Amalgamated survived largely because its union owner insisted on conservative banking and professional management. In contrast, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers set up banks across the country during the 1920s and quickly branched into securities and even Florida land development. Losses piled up, and the union eventually charged four of its officers with mishandling funds. By 1931, the engineers were out of the banking business.

Amalgamated has also benefited from being something of a rogue bank, loudly touting a consumer ethic and often de-emphasizing profits in favor of services. Its free checking account is only the latest evidence: Amalgamated claims to have pioneered the unsecured installment loan in the 1920s, lending money to borrowers with no collateral but a steady job. Three times a survey has named it the top bank for consumers in New York City. "They give me the best treatment," says Mike Garcia, an officer of the Leather Goods, Plastic and Novelty Workers' Union, who says he banks at Amalgamated because of its labor roots.

OVERLAPPING CONSTITUENCIES

Amalgamated has reported 44 consecutive years of profit and has grown to $1.47 billion in assets by serving two overlapping constituencies: middle-class consumers and organized labor. Now, the union-owned bank is exploring other ways to use its labor ties and financial muscle to expand in new areas.

Earlier this year, Amalgamated teamed up with Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in a proposal to offer a comprehensive money-management program for the AFL-CIO's 14.5 million members. On a smaller but no less innovative scale, Amalgamated is helping three New York locals of the Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers union use some of their pension money to finance below-market, no-points home mortgages for their members. The bank is considering expanding the service to other unions, many of which have retirement trust funds under Amalgamated's care.

The recent mini-resurgence of labor banking is led by unions in the construction trades. Massachusetts members of the carpenters' union opened a Boston bank in September, and California carpenters plan to open a separate institution next year. Two-year-old Union Savings Bank in Albuquerque, N.M., another construction-trades bank, uses its $10 million in assets for loans to small businesses and other customers.

"I think there's been a realization that we should be generating jobs with our own money wherever possible," says Anthony Ramos, the retired former leader of the California State Council of Carpenters.

Amalgamated's loud voice on consumer issues is partly a marketing ploy to set itself apart from the pack. As other banks cater to big depositors and raise fees for small accounts, Amalgamated promotes treats for the little guy, such as its free checking and low-interest personal loans.

Highly conscious of its labor roots, Amalgamated also likes to take shots at the establishment banks. In one of its radio commercials, a stuffy banker tells a customer he needs a password to sit down. "The name of any Ivy League school will do," says the banker. "P.S. 188?" asks the customer, naming the public school he attended. In other ads, comedians Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara imitate rank-and-filers with names like Rocco and Blanche, and pitch "America's Labor Bank."

"If we give [the industry] an uncomfortable feeling for a couple of hours, it will be worth it," concludes Edward M. Katz, Amalgamated's president and chief executive.

The bank's five-story brick headquarters, which it shares with its union owner, overlooks New York's Union Square, the site of labor and political rallies earlier in the century. Back in the old days, Amalgamated's services even included a travel agency and foreign-exchange desk for the immigrant population that dominated the clothing workers' union. Today, customers in open shirts and work boots outnumber those in business suits. Proclaims a plaque on the lobby wall: "New York's First Labor Bank, dedicated to the service and advancement of the labor movement."

Mr. Katz, too, is quick to prove his allegiance. After ushering a visitor into his office, he flips open his suit jacket and proudly shows the union label. A soft-spoken man of 66 who started as a part-timer at the bank in 1946, Mr. Katz raises his voice when he talks about how small depositors have fared under banking deregulation. Not too well, he believes. "When you have a special industry using Uncle Sam as an umbrella in times of difficulty, don't you owe something to the public?" he asks. "What would be so wrong with having an account on which you don't make money?"

Amalgamated, though, is bucking a strong trend. A national survey conducted by the Consumer Federation of America and others found that fees for routine banking services are rising sharply for most depositors.

In some ways, Amalgamated has a lot less to offer those customers than its competitors. Small by big-bank standards, it doesn't generally offer credit cards or home mortgages. With only three branches and two newly opened automated teller machines, it lacks what many consumers want most: convenience. And in the ranks of big-league banks, Amalgamated is an also-ran, shunning such trends as interstate expansion and the hot competition for corporate loans.

"I'm not conscious of their presence" as a competitor, says Richard Ravitch, the chairman and chief executive of Bowery Savings Bank, which has about four times the assets and eight times the branches of Amalgamated. Contends another New York banking official: "If they were the best, they'd be bigger."

But what Amalgamated does have, it pushes hard, especially its reputation as a low-cost consumer bank. Last year, when an annual survey by New York State Sen. Franz S. Leichter dropped Amalgamated to No. 11 from No. 1 as the least expensive bank for New York City consumers. Amalgamated officials phoned the legislator and angrily complained. (The bank is back up to No. 2 this year.) In 1985, the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan New York challenged Amalgamated's boast of having the lowest auto-loan rates of any bank in the city. But the bank quickly backed up the claim, the bureau says.

Amalgamated says its current 9.2% interest rate on new auto loans is still the best in the city. According to the Bank Rate Monitor, seven of the largest bank and thrift institutions in the New York City area charge an average of nearly 12.5%. On the deposit side, the bank's 6.25% annual yield on money-market accounts is a third of a point higher than the average paid by 10 big institutions tracked by the monitor.

Amalgamated also pays interest and charges no fees on savings accounts with a $5 minimum. And it is not unusual for the bank to get thank-you notes from longtime customers surprised to find the bank honored their checks—and charged no penalty—on their overdrawn accounts.

Customers' main complaint centers on what bank employees call "the conga line" that often slowly snakes its way to 23 tellers in the lobby of the main office. Still, other factors outweight the long waits, depositors say. Edward Soorko, for example, says he moved his account to Amalgamated after Citibank bounced a check for his son's tuition—even though he covered the check with a deposit the same day.

Charles Nabelle, a dapper 82-year-old customer in a white hat and sports coat, walks 13 blocks to get to Amalgamated's Union Square office. There are plenty of closer banks, but he says he chose Amalgamated because he likes the personal attention he gets there. After cashing a $40 check, Mr. Nabelle offers a short lecture on the importance of shopping for bank services. "A poor sucker will go for Chase Manhattan as opposed to Amalgamated because Chase or Citibank is an important bank," he says. "That is unfortunate."

And perhaps costly. Sen. Leichter's latest survey found that a typical bank customer with $600 in checking and $1,000 in savings would earn $105 in a year at Amalgamated and lose $100 at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. Amalgamated, says Glenn von Nostitz, the legislative aide who oversees the survey, shows "you can give people a break and still make money."

Not surprisingly, Amalgamated has kept a close relationship with organized labor. Unions account for up to two-thirds of its $1.1 billion in deposits, and its trust department holds an additional $3.2 billion in pension and health-and-welfare funds. Amalgamated manages $1.6 billion of the trust funds, shunning stocks and corporate bonds in favor of safer government securities.

In 1973, Amalgamated officials worked over a weekend to fill out hundreds of bail checks to keep striking Philadelphia teachers out of jail. Nine years later, when the National Football League Players Association ran out of money during its strike, it turned to Amalgamated for a $200,000 loan. The players' union didn't have an account with the bank at the time, but "we did after that," says Ed Garvey, then the union's executive director.

Although neither the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers union nor the bank likes to admit it, the goal of giving consumers and unions a break often conflicts with the goal of making money. But Mr. Katz has the luxury of working for owners who aren't constantly pressing for higher profits. "You make a little less," concedes Jack Sheinkman, the president, of the union and chairman of the bank. "Despite that, we've done very well in terms of our return on equity and on capital," which exceed the average for banks Amalgamated's size.

That attitude makes it easier for the bankers to concentrate on another priority of the union—financial safety. The bank has few corporate customers, and, as a matter of policy, turns down offers to participate with other banks in corporate lending. "I don't want to rely on my big brothers" to determine if a loan is safe, says Mr. Katz. Nor does he like to gamble on investments. Mr. Katz prefers buying U.S. government securities, and the shorter the maturity the better. "All the money's tied up in cash," jokes Howard Lee, the executive vice president and cashier.

The result is steady, if not spectacular, profits. Last year, Amalgamated earned $12.2 million, sending $7 million of that in dividends to its union owners. Government bank examiners often do double takes when they pore over Amalgamated's books. Bad loans charged off in 1986: $195,000 out of $313.5 million, far below the average for banks its size. Auto loans delinquent 30 days or more at the end of November: 11 out of 13,044.

Says William A. Goldberg, who runs the bank's personal-loan department: "We're here for the average guy—so long as we are reasonably assured he'll pay us back."

LEXINGTON CITIZENS PRAY FOR PEACE

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, just prior to this month's summit meeting, a group of concerned citizens from Lexington, MA, issued a proclamation for peace calling upon all people everywhere to set aside a moment of thanksgiving that this meeting is taking place, and let them offer prayer or other appropriate expression of moral concern, especially in their places of worship, for the success of the meeting between Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev.

They undertook this initiative because of their understanding of the magnitude and consequences of the summit meeting and their conviction that it is necessary to build a moral and spiritual foundation for world peace by mobilizing grassroots action and involvement.

I commend their interest and commitment to seeking new solutions to the problems the United States and the Soviet Union face in the area of arms control, regional conflict, and human rights and join in their hope and prayers that this month's summit meeting will lead to a more stable and lasting peace.

THE SUPERCONDUCTING SUPER COLLIDER

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to congratulate my constituents in their efforts to locate the superconducting super collider in the State of California. This exciting project not only has the potential of becoming the most valuable science project, it will lead to a new understanding of the fundamental building blocks of the universe. The support for this project among the many diverse groups in California has been outstanding, as representatives from the scientific, academic, technical, agricultural, working trades, local and State governments, and the general public have worked together to make this State home for the SSC. If chosen to be the site, as I hope it will, California will be able to reap the economic benefits such as new jobs and educational fundings, as well as strengthen its world-class standing in science, technology, education, commerce and industry.

The State of California is committed to over $1 billion toward this goal. It has put together a deeply committed team of planners and designers to insure that this project is in accordance with all State environmental laws, economically viable, and safe from any possible earthquake damage. The State will provide access roads, wastewater lines, power, gas and water to the site. Realizing the vital importance of the agriculture industry, the State has expended great effort to insure that as little farmland as possible is removed from production, and for those landowners and renters who are affected that they compensated fairly.

I am proud of the proposal my constituents have diligently put together on behalf of this State. It is an effort in which we all can take pride, and if California is chosen as the SSC site, it is due to the support and sacrifice of many Californians who worked together to make a scientific ideal come true.

CONGRESS AND THE FUTURE

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, in honor of the 100th Congress and the upcoming bicentennial of the U.S. Congress, I have delivered several speeches on the floor of the House on the history of the U.S. Congress. I have looked back, reflecting on the 1st Congress and on 10 of the many outstanding accomplishments of the Congress over the past 200 years, as well as on the historic 100th Congress. Now, I would look ahead as we begin our third century under the U.S. Constitution.

My previous remarks provided an opportunity for us to reflect upon the lessons of the past and to apply them to the future. Although I do not have a crystal ball, I strongly believe that a better understanding of our past is essential to a more complete understanding of what the future may hold for this institution and for the country. There is a lot that we can predict, even though the exact course of future events will, of course, remain elusive. There are enduring themes throughout our history that we will recur in our future, and I am certain that some of the problems we face today will continue to demand our attention in the years ahead.

I strongly believe, Mr. Speaker, that the very instrument which has carried us through 200 years as a nation, the U.S. Constitution, will continue to be our compass for charting a course into the next century. I can think of no better place to begin than at the beginning of the Constitution itself, in the preamble, where the very purpose, of government are laid out so brilliantly. The Constitution was created to help us "* * * form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity." The challenge of these words will be as vital to the U.S. Congress in the next 100 years as it has been in our first 200.

How we fulfill these noble ideals in the years ahead will determine our success as a Congress and as a nation. This task has never been easy, and it certainly will not get any easier in the future. There will be major challenges on fundamental domestic issues and foreign policy matters in an increasingly interdependent and complex global economy. In the final analysis, these issues can be boiled down into just two: The state of the U.S. economy, and war and peace. The role of the Congress in determining our Nation's response to these matters must be as a coequal in Government, a role which reflects the Congress' responsibility to the American people and to the Constitution in keeping the principles of representative democracy alive.

The American people expect the Congress to take an active part in protecting individual liberty, encouraging economic growth, preserving our environment and natural resources, promoting education, and defending this Nation. Each of these areas will undoubtedly continue to demand our attention in the years ahead—and Congress will respond to the needs of the American people, as the Constitution requires.

We will not be able to work in isolation or in ignorance of the other nations of the world. The United States cannot extricate itself from what is going on around this troubled globe. It is impossible. The process by which we interact with other countries of the world is a dynamic one, and it will never stop.

Many of the problems of the next century will involve expanding technologies. Technology is always a double-edged sword: It can solve problems and can create new ones. How we respond to the challenges of major scientific and technological advances will determine how well we fare as a nation. We cannot turn back the clock on new technology. Yet we must embrace these new advances with caution. New fields such as genetic engineering offer great possibilities for breakthroughs in fighting disease and ending hunger on this planet; however, we should not rush headlong into this brave new world without fully understanding the implications of these powerful new tools and what they mean to life on this planet.

One of the important things we can do to prepare for the exciting possibilities of the future is to see to it that our children, those who are and will be running this country, are equipped with the best possible education we can provide. Education is the bedrock of all that we are as a nation. Federal, State, and local governments across the country all have important roles to play in this enterprise.

Which we need to produce more scientists and engineers, we also must produce more writers, historians, and philosophers. Future generations of Americans also must understand how government works. The need will be to educate the whole person rather than teaching a few technical skills may be outmoded in a few years. They will require the knowledge to adapt to a changing world without losing our roots, our culture, and our values. This will be critical if we expect the Constitution itself to last beyond its bicentennial and on to its tricentennial. As James Madison, the father of the Constitution, wrote:

> A popular government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy; or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance; And a people who mean to be their own Governors, must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.

Mr. Speaker, I am a realist—aware of the tremendously complex problems facing our world today, but confident that we can build a truly better nation and contribute substantially to a safer, more peaceful world. The Constitution has been our guide for two centuries. Its vitality and strength are undiminished; it is stronger then ever. It formed the basis for the role which the Congress has played throughout the development of our Government and the policies of the United States. As long as the American people support and defend their Constitution, and as long as Members of Congress faithfully carry out its provisions, we can be confident in the future of the Congress and in the future of this Nation.

TRIBUTE TO ART KELLY

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this year, I will be losing a long-time staff member in my district, Art Kelly. I want to take a moment to thank him and to publicly express my deep gratitude and appreciation for his work on my behalf over the years.

Beginning in 1970, Art Kelly served as special assistant in my main district office in Rochester, NY. In 1980, he semiretired, remaining on as a special field representative in the Wayne and Monroe County areas. For Art, though, semiretirement is a non sequitur. His work was as comprehensive and dedicated as ever.

Prior to joining my staff, Art worked for 35 years for radio station WHAM in Rochester. For many of those years, he was its station manager. During World War II, Art taught navigational skills to pilots prior to their entering the war. He cochaired the Perinton, NY, bicentennial and headed the Historical Society of Perinton, where he lived for more than 30 years. Art was the president of the Egypt, NY, fire department and an active member and historian for the Fairport Grange.

Art and his beautiful wife, Helen, currently live in East Bloomfield, NY. Naturally, Art continues to be very active in the community and is the assistant director of the Antique Wireless Museum. His involvement in early radio continues at St. John Fisher College to this day.

Mr. Speaker, for 17 years Art has worked with and for me. During those years, he was in charge of my Rochester district office. He frequently represented me at meetings and public events when activity here in Washington forced my absence. His professionalism and caring attitude perfectly reflected my attitudes in providing the most efficient constituent services possible.

His continued participation in many events through his semiretirement, including my annual office hours trip in Wayne County, has been a great help to me, and exemplifies Art's good nature and the respect that so many of my constituents pay to him.

Mr. Speaker, someone once said that a good time to retire is before it's too late to have a good time. Knowing Art and Helen like I do, I'm sure that they will greatly enjoy a much deserved rest.

My most sincere thanks to a wonderful man, Arthur Kelly, for his devotion, his loyalty, and his outstanding work for me and for the people of the 29th District of New York. My staff, my wife, Nancy, and I want to extend our kindest regards, and wish Art and Helen many, many years of health and happiness in their retirement.

WORKING AND POOR WITH NO PLACE TO GO

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, it is troubling indeed, that in this sixth year of economic recovery, we are witnessing an expansion in the numbers of the working poor. Between 1976 and 1986, the number of workers living in poverty increased from 6.6 to 8.9 million. With affordable housing and decent jobs beginning to look more like the exception than the rule across the United States, we have seen the emergence of a new social phenomenon—the working homeless.

In a 10-city survey recently released by the National Coalition for the Homeless, shelter workers reported a marked increase in the number of working homeless who could not afford to pay for housing. On average, 30 percent of the homeless studied in the survey were working full or part time. In the District of Columbia, nearly two-thirds of homeless men living in city-funded shelters work full or part time. And 22 percent of the District's homeless families have working members.

These findings are underscored by a survey of homelessness and hunger just released by the U.S. Conference of Mayors. This year, the demand for emergency shelter in major cities increased by 21 percent. For families, the demand jumped by 32 percent, bringing with it a host of health and safety problems for homeless children.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, which I chair, has documented that the cost of owning or even renting a home has become prohibitive for poor households. During the Reagan recovery, homeownership for householders under age 25 has declined by 16 percent. Between 1974 and 1983, the median rent burden for the poorest households increased from 35 percent of total income to 46 percent. And while the number of households needing low-rental housing is projected to increase by 44 percent between now and the year 2003, the total number of available low-rental housing is expected to decline by 27 percent.

Many of the homeless poor work in service jobs with low pay, few or no benefits, and limited opportunities for advancement. Between 1986 and the year 2000, low-wage jobs in the service sector—from janitors to cashiers—will predominate among occupations with the largest expected job growth. Five of the eleven job categories accounting for the majority of new jobs pay at or below $11,400 a year.

Despite its claims that all is well in America, the Reagan administration carries a heavy responsibility in creating this crisis. Over the past 7 years, the administration has cut Federal public housing programs by 75 percent. It has dragged its feet in implementation of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, which Congress passed earlier this year to assist private organizations and localities in sheltering the homeless, and to make modest efforts assisting homeless families and children. And just 2 days ago, the White House threatened to veto a major housing and community development bill which would shore up the supply of moderate and low-income housing.

Mr. Speaker, the growing numbers of the working poor, the working homeless and homeless families tell us that the social contract of the postwar era has come to a close. In America, we were told, if you worked hard, you could buy a home and save for the future. Rising incomes and Federal mortgage assistance programs helped families improve their fortunes and realize their dreams. Now that social contract has been replaced by a grim economic reality. No matter how hard American families work, they may still be poor with no place to go.

HUMAN RIGHTS ON THE MARCH: 250,000 RALLY IN WASHINGTON ON BEHALF OF SOVIET JEWRY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, it is my great honor to commend today the 250,000 people from around the world who rallied on the Ellipse and then marched down Constitution Avenue in Washington this month on behalf of Soviet Jewry. Unprecedented in size and fervor, the gathering brought together politicians of both parties, as well as all elements of the Jewish community, in a unified protest of the Soviet Union's treatment of Jews and other religious minorities, in violation of the Soviet Union's own constitution, the Helsinki agreement and the United Nation's Declaration of the Rights of Man.

One cannot help wonder if such a rally before World War II would have helped prevent the Holocaust. As Nobel Laureate and Holocaust Survivor Elie Wiesel told the protestors: "It is now clear that had there been such a large demonstration of Jews—and human solidarity of concern—in 1942, 1943, and 1944, millions of Jews would have been saved. But too many were silent then. We are not silent today."

One can also not help but marvel at the dedication and spirit of these demonstrators, most of them young, who rallied to the cause of their own history timed to coincide with the summit meeting of Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev, the demonstration riveted world attention on the Soviet Union's total disregard in the past of the rights of individuals to worship, to be with their spouses, to emigrate, to be spiritually free people within the rational bounds of their own government.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this rally was a turning point in what has now become a world march for human rights. Whereas not even the entire Jewish community could have been brought together for such a protest a decade ago, now they were enthusiastically supportive of their brother's right to freedom. Whereas American Christians and other non-Jewish groups had been diffident, they, too, now raised their voices on the Ellipse to protest one government's disregard of the fundamental human rights of its citizens. As Winston Pickett reported in the Northern California Jewish Bulletin: "For some, it was their first national demonstration. For the ex-peaceniks of the Vietnam War era, there was a sense of deja vu. For veterans of the Soviet Jewry movement, it was a shot in the arm."

The world is coming to realize that human rights are indivisible, that a violation anywhere is an affront, and a call to action, to all. Washington and Moscow may agree to nuclear arms treaties, and that is certainly all to the good. But I maintain that true glasnost, true world peace between the superpowers will not come to pass until these issues of basic human rights are dealt with and resolved. It is the primary issue between our governments today, Mr. Speaker, the issue that divides, erodes, and breeds mistrust, despite agreements in other areas. What Jew can hail an arms agreement when he is prevented from leaving the Soviet Union? What Christian? Indeed, Christians will observe their 1,000 anniversary in the Soviet Union next year—and from where? At least 200 of them from jails. Psychiatric hospitals. Labor camps.

Mr. Speaker, the temperature on that December day was a chilly 36 degrees, but none of the demonstrators seemed to mind. They generated warmth through their solidarity—a sea of chanting, singing, praying and most of all, caring people. For nearly everyone, it forged memories of compassion. One young man, Reuben Haller, put his feelings into a poem, which he wrote on the plane back to San Francisco from Washington, then read to the 130 bay area demonstrators who flew cross country to participate in the rally. I submit it for the RECORD:

It was 36 degrees in Washington on a cold December day,
When 130 Jews flew in from the city by the Bay.
They came for justice, nothing less, they would not accept 'no'.
"We demand," they said to Gorbachev, "you let my people go!"
You say there'll be a brain drain if they leave just like a flood;
But Soviet Jews don't belong to you, they are our flesh and blood!
And so we came to Washington to make our demands clear.
And we will raise our voices high until we know you hear.
Our will is set, our minds made up, it makes no difference how.
We will fight and struggle and demand you give us justice now!
We are all like Moses, every Jew, at Pharoah's mighty throne;
But we are the miracles that will force Gorbachev to let the Jews go home!

A TRIBUTE TO ROADWAY EXPRESS

HON. TOM SAWYER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Roadway Express, a corporation located in my congressional district and the recipient of the 1986 President's Trophy, the trucking industry's most prestigious safety award.

At a time when the American public is increasingly expressing concerns over the safety of our transportation system, it is with great pride that I share with you the distinguished recognition Roadway Express has received for its safety efforts and accomplishments in the trucking industry.

The President's Trophy was presented to Roadway Express at the recently held American Trucking Association's annual convention. Roadway was chosen on the basis of its overall safety record, which for the fourth consecutive year remains the best in the Nation and for its safety program activities. In that Roadway provides service to all 50 States and its operation covers nearly 500 million miles a year, the company's achievement in this area represents an enormous commitment toward providing the safest possible service and one that certainly benefits not only its customers but also the motoring public in general.

The President's Trophy is well deserved recognition for Roadway's longstanding commitment to safety on our highways. More than 20 years ago, I worked for Roadway Express to save enough money to go back to school. It was a valuable experience for many reasons, but among the clearest lessons I recall was the enormous pride taken throughout the company at every level for its industrywide safety leadership. I remain proud of that achievement today.

The judges for this year's award were Richard P. Landis, Associate Administrator for Motor Carriers at the Federal Highway Administration; Chuck Hurley, execution director for the National Safety Council's Washington, DC, office; and Chuch Livingston, coordinator of safety programs for the Highway Users Federation.

The President's Trophy is a tribute to Roadway's drivers, dock workers, and mechanics, as well as its management personnel. I extend my thanks to them all for the ongoing effort to keep safety a major priority and the exemplary standards they continue to set for the industry to follow.

THE SUPERCONDUCTING SUPER COLLIDER

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to praise the efforts of several diverse, energetic groups to locate the proposed superconducting super collider in the State of California. These groups—comprised of numerous chambers of commerce, city councils, boards of supervisors, newspapers, and large groups of citizens—are convinced, as I am, of the importance of this project to the economic growth of California. The SSC would add considerably to local and State funding and personal income, and it would provide more jobs for California residents. The excitement of this project has spread to the general public; 69 percent of northern Californians who are familiar with the SSC support California as its location.

The State of California is ready and willing to commit $1 billion in an effort to place the SSC within its borders. California, enriched with a wealth of scientists and academic talent, has the resources and technology to fully support and maintain this great scientific project. Recent studies have shown that present designs of the SSC make it impervious to earthquake damage, particularly at either of the proposed sites in Stockton and Davis. Communities throughout northern California have expressed the need for this project and, just as importantly, the State itself is committed to making its wishes become reality. In addition, all 47 members of the California congressional delegation are in full support of having this important research facility located in the Golden State.

TRIBUTE TO RAY A. BARNHART

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a distinguished and very able gentleman, Mr. Ray A. Barnhart, who is retiring from his position as Federal Highway Administrator at the end of this year. Ray has headed the Federal Highway Administration for the last 7 years. In my opinion, there has been no more able or forthright administrator at the Department of Transportation during his tenure.

In my capacity as chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, I have dealt with Ray on many occasions. Sometimes we have been on the same side, sometimes not. But no matter what the circumstances, the things I could always count on from Ray were professionalism and straight talk. Those are valued commodities in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Highway Administration rarely makes the front pages. But, if you talk to the executives and policymakers around town, you will find that the Federal Highway Administration has a reputation as one of the better managed and more effective Federal agencies anywhere in Government. They have built a transportation network that is by far the best in the world. This is a tribute to the men and women of the Federal Highway Administration, and to Ray Barnhart whose stewardship has been exemplary.

I extend my congratulations to Ray for a job well done. And, as long as he is not running for office, I wish him the very best for the future.

HERD FEVER

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday, the Thundering Herd of Marshall University played for the NCAA Division I-AA college football championship at Pocatello, ID. In one of the all-time thrillers, Marshall was narrowly beaten by Northeast Louisiana 43 to 42.

Nevertheless, the 1-point loss in the championship could hardly diminish the pride and excitement that the Herd brought to the people of Huntington, WV and the entire State. We were all infected by "Herd Fever" as the State of West Virginia rallied around the Herd, everyone basking in the glow as these fine young men showed the country the true West Virginia spirit.

It has been 17 years since that tragic October day in 1970 when a plane crash killed the entire Marshall University football team. As I watched the Herd play this past Saturday, I was filled with emotion as I thought about how the school has been able to bounce back from that shocking tragedy.

My congratulations go out to Coach George Chaump and all of the Marshall Thundering Herd and I thank them for the memories. We are all so very proud of them and wish them the best in their future endeavors.

CARING FOR PEOPLE WITH AIDS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues a message from Bishop Francis A. Quinn of Sacramento, CA, on caring for people with AIDS. It is truly a message for people of all faiths.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE CATHOLIC DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO CONCERNING THE CHRISTIAN RESPONSE IN CARING FOR OUR BROTHERS AND SISTERS WITH AIDS (ARC)

(By Bishop Francis A. Quinn)

(I am indebted to Father John Healy, diocesan coordinator of AIDS ministry, and his colleagues in the preparation of this statement).

"As long as you did it to one of these the least among you, you did it to me." (Matt. 25).

I would like to make it clear at the outset that this is a pastoral statement on ministry to people with AIDS. It is not about issues of sexuality and morality. The Church's teaching on those matters can be found in other documents.

I. THEOLOGY OF SUFFERING AND MINISTRY

Jesus, while walking on this earth, constantly reminded us that healing the sick and ministering to them was a sure sign of the presence of God's Kingdom. Jesus celebrated only one Eucharist. He never baptized or confirmed. He spent little time in administration, but He spent a substantial amount of his life ministering to those who were sick or grieving, e.g. the widow of Naim, to people who were different, outsiders, Gentiles, "lepers" (Hansen's disease), Samaritans, and to those who were poor, discriminated against and powerless. He did not castigate them. He has a special gift for listening, making people feel respected and loved; and they were never the same again. A healing occurred; they were freed from self hatred, and so could overcome unhealthy or destructive behavior and grow spiritually, emotionally and even physically.

Jesus never equated sin with disease. In fact, He went out of His way to show how cruel that connection could be. (John 9:13).

Many of the people Jesus ministered to and healed were regarded as sinners, as outsiders, as "getting what they deserved", by society's standards and even by the "good" religious people and leaders. Jesus did not react to anyone in that manner. He went out of His way to treat all of these with compassion, reverence, respect and love: the result was miraculous, a life-giving transformation. He restored their human dignity, their belief in themselves, and the sense that they were loved. Before that, they felt the rejection and hatred of people around them, more sadly still, they began to hate themselves and act accordingly.

Jesus' harshest words were reserved for self righteous people who condemned and rejected others. He simply said that those worthy of His kingdom would be judged on how they treated one another (Matt. 25), especially the "least among us": the hungry, the sick, prisoners, outcasts, rejects, and sinners.

Jesus did not worry about being seen as too soft, or not standing up for God's commandments: He was not controlled by a niggling inner guilt that makes some of us come down judgmentally on "sinners" to convince ourselves we are on God's side. His stories of God's mercy, e.g. the Prodigal Son (Luke 15) depict an outrageously forgiving father. It is only the much less forgiving elder son who mentions the word "sin". The fact of the matter is that we all have fallen short of the love of God; we are all sinners.

If Christ or the Church ministered only to those who did not bring some of their misfortune on themselves, there would be little ministry. Our smoking, over eating, over drinking, drug taking, negative stress, dangerous driving, and many other destructive and even sinful habits can bring on sickness, disease and death. We always have to work to change these patterns of life to become healthy. We need, above all, to experience God's love through the touch of flesh and blood friends before we can do anything at all about life styles.

If we want to talk of "wrath of God", one of the greatest sins in our world today, by Jesus' yardstick (Matt. 25), is the death of thousands through starvation every day while we have plenty. If we believe in a "wrath of God", reaction to people with AIDS, then we, as individuals, and our Church and country need to examine our own consciences about the source of our values when it comes to a consistent ethic of life. Are they Gospel values or society's values?

The Church has a long and courageous tradition of making present the compassionate, healing, freeing love of Christ to the sick and dying. It has been especially present at times of plagues, tragedies and terminal illness. The Church has never hesitated to appoint special ministers to those who are hospitalized or in prison. Dying people, e.g. those ravaged by AIDS, cancer, heart disease, have a unique call on our love, compassion and ministry. We may be surprised to find the special gifts, even conversion which they bring us as they experience rejection, fear, doubt, loneliness, depression and anger, along with their pain. It is a privilege indeed to work with someone when all the illusions are swept away. This powerful experience can be most redemptive. The torn, beaten, rejected body of Jesus in His passion and death comes in to view again in that patient lying on his or her bed.

II. AIDS

An epidemic brings out the worst in us, our fear, self-protectiveness and mean-spiritedness, and the best in us, our generosity, courage and magnanimity. It is, above all, a time for us to be true Christians, and to be Church, as the Body of Christ, always solicitous for its wounded members.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta has suggested that we are treating people with AIDS like modern day "lepers". Perhaps we need to face the implications of that dreadfilled word! Those who suffer with AIDS and are treated as "lepers" once were, have sometimes come to believe that they are the modern day manifestation of this disease. We might remember the experience of St. Francis of Assisi, who found that when he kissed the "lepers", he (Francis) was healed and the "lepers" disappeared. An inner conversion, a healing had taken place. Francis had faced his own fears, destroyed his personal prejudice, leaped over social bonds and came into the light of Christ. Freed to love unconditionally in that light, he lovingly went out and cared for the sick.

III. FACTS

Along with an epidemic of AIDS, we are in grave danger of an epidemic of ignorance and prejudice. At the present time, it is true that AIDS is a disease largely experienced by gay men in the United States, but this is not the case worldwide. Up to now, California has reported approximately 4,000 AIDS cases. More than 300,000 Californians are carrying the virus and may pass it on. The mortality rate in the first year after contracting the disease is almost 50%. The Catholic Diocese of Sacramento has a special concern for the Medical Correctional Facility at Vacaville, where virtually all AIDS patients in the State prison system are confined.

AIDS (Aquired Immune Deficiency Syndronme) causes a breakdown in the body's immune system, leaving it vulnerable to infections (especially P.C.P., or pneumocystis casinii pneumonia) and cancers (especially K.S., or Kaposis' sarcoma) which normally do not affect healthy people. AIDS is caused by a virus called H T L V (Human T-Cell Lymphotropic Virus III). There is not yet a cure for AIDS, but treatments for the infectious cancer are available.

Much of the hysteria about AIDS is a result of fear and ignorance about the danger of contracting it. There is no evidence up to now that it is transmitted in any way except: a) by intimate sexual contact involving the exchange of semen or blood. (It is not transmitted by saliva, sweat or tears); b) by infected blood entering the blood stream directly through the use of contaminated hypodermic needles or, by a transfusion of infected blood or blood product; c) by an infant while it is developing in the womb or during birth or during breast feeding from a mother who has contracted AIDS.

IV. PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

AIDS is not spread by casual contact. You cannot get AIDS by being near or hugging someone, swimming in a public pool, eating in a restaurant, using public bathrooms, or by donating blood. Normal health precautions have to be taken, as with all infectious diseases, but exaggerated precautions add to the patient's isolation and suffering, and are unnecessary, unjust and non-Christian. The same must be said about keeping children with AIDS out of school, and legislation that would limit housing for people with AIDS, or require their being quarantined.

Our diocese is ready to work with legislative, correctional, social service, educational and Church groups to meet this challenge in a just, caring and informed way. Furthermore, we pledge the institutions of the diocese to be present, to ask no judgmental or condemnatory questions, but simply to be the compassionate presence of Christ on a lonely road.

The role of our diocese, of pastor, chaplain, minister, helping agency and pastoral counselors is primarily a role of reconciliation. So often AIDS is a syndrome of alienation and separation between the person with the disease and every support system around him or her. As Church, we can offer a healing ministry of reconciliation, to help restore a sense of wholeness to broken relationships between the patient, family and friends.

All responsible for administration of the Sacraments shall be especially sensitive to the particular needs of people with AIDS. Our Catholic hospitals have made very real progress in instructing their staffs and setting policies concerning the disease. We encourage them to continue in this course. The Diocesan Catholic School Department is developing appropriate policies. Hospice of Mercy in Redding and in the Sacramento area have patients with AIDS. Catholic Social Services is prepared to provide group and individual counseling. Catholic chaplains to correctional facilities need our wholehearted support.

St. Francis Parish, Sacramento, through particular organizations, provides spiritual and emotional assistance. We offer the educational and media facilities of the diocese to deepen our scientific and theological knowledge about this disease to lessen prejudice, fear and distance. We only prejudge when we do not know. We know that some people with AIDS have nowhere to go. Perhaps all of us together, church and health care institutions, social service agencies, lay and charitable organizations, city, county and state can come together to provide housing or inhouse-hospice type care. We pledge all of this, conscious of our limitations in time and resources.

Much more remains to be done: as a first step, we must build trust and a sense of caring. These require time, a change of heart and considerable education. The matter is critical; there is very little time for someone dying of AIDS. We need to bring together those willing to help and those who need help.

We must deal with death, but above all we want to help people live. We ask the advocacy and the prayers of our diocesan community for our brothers and sisters, fellow members of the Body of Christ who are suffering pain, discrimination, rejection, despair or guilt in this or any other terminal disease.

If the yardstick of our Faith is unconditional love, particularly love of those whom society regards as outcasts, then our response to people suffering from AIDS will be a measure of our Faith.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT OF 1987

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I insert the following summary of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It provides detailed, but easily understood, information about the package of reforms for the Farm Credit System that passed the House late last week:

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT OF 1987

(H.R. 3030)

RESTRUCTURING OF FARM LOANS

H.R. 3030 will require Farm Credit System (FCS) lenders to restructure the loans of financially-stressed farmer-borrowers, in order to help keep farmers on the land and help turn around the condition of stressed System institutions. Restructuring (which involves compromise of debt obligations) will be required if that is the least-cost alternative, that is, if it will produce more return to the lender than foreclosure.

Similar requirements will be imposed on the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) with respect to its farm loans.

FARM CREDIT SYSTEM BORROWER STOCK

The bill will require FCS institutions to redeem at par value all farmer-held stock to ensure farmer-borrowers their investment in the System will be preserved.

ADDITIONAL PROTECTION FOR FARM-BORROWERS

The bill includes a number of provisions designed to give FCS and FmHA farm borrowers under financial stress a fair opportunity to overcome their credit problems without adversely affecting creditor rights.

New borrower rights include:

Enhanced review and appeal of adverse credit decisions on FCS and FmHA loan applications and loan restructuring;

Prohibit FCS lenders from foreclosing any loan on account of declining collateral value or previous delinquency if the borrower has made or brings current all accrued payments of loan principal, interest, and penalties;

Rights of "first refusal" providing that family farm borrowers of the FCS and FmHA can re-purchase or lease foreclosed property they previously owned;

Increased FCS and FmHA borrower access to loan documents and information, and right to obtain an independent, "second opinion" appraisal for use in disputes involving collateral values;

Requirement that FmHA release sufficient income to cover living and operating expenses of farm families during foreclosure proceedings, up to $18,000 annually.

H.R. 3030 authorizes $7.5 million annually (for 4 years) for matching grants to States for operation of farm loan mediation programs, but no State may receive more than $500,000 per year. The bill also extends and improves an existing interest rate buy-down program operated by the FmHA.

FARM CREDIT SYSTEM ASSISTANCE

H.R. 3030 establishes the Federal Assistance Board which will derive up to $4 billion from sale of 15-year bonds. These bond proceeds will be used during the next five years to infuse money into FCS institutions that must have outside help to redeem borrower stock at par value, pay off debt securities as they mature, or continue lending to farmers at competitive interest rates. The U.S. Treasury will pay all interest to assistance-bond investors for five years, then half the interest for another five years. If FCS lacks cash to retire the 15-year bonds when they mature, it can borrow as necessary for that purpose from the Treasury.

The bill establishes a Federal Assistance Board to oversee the federal assistance. The Board will be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture and one agricultural producer with experience in financial matters appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The Federal Assistance Board would work with troubled System institutions to develop business plans that maximize self-help and make efficient use of Federal funds. Approval of business plans, except for emergency help, would be a pre-condition for Federal assistance.

SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKETS FOR AGRICULTURAL LOANS

A new secondary market for agricultural loans would be created, under which commercial farm lenders and the Farm Credit System will gain new access to capital markets. This new secondary market is patterned after—and in many respects similar to—existing successful secondary market structures previously developed for the housing sector: the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), and the Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae).

The bill establishes the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation (Farmer Mac) to perform the following primary functions:

Develop and enforce uniform underwriting, appraisal and repayment standards for loans eligible for the secondary market;

Determine eligibility and certify specific financial institutions to serve as pooler underwriters of the agricultural mortgages;

Provide its guarantee for timely payment of interest and principal on qualified pools of mortgages that are securitized and sold in the capital markets.

The market will rely on pooling and underwriting—subject to prior certification and direction of the Mortgage Corporation—by private-sector institutions with the financial and management capacity to perform those functions efficiently. A special reserve, equal to 10 percent of the face value of mortgages in the pool, is required for each securitized pool of loans. Borrowing authority from Treasury, up to $1.5 billion, is authorized in order to make individual pools of mortgages marketable to investors at competitive prices. An intermediate reserve fund, established through collection of fees from farm loan poolers in exchange for credit enhancement, would be used to pay any losses prior to using the Treasury line of credit.

This new secondary market should benefit American farmers in a number of ways:

Farm borrowers generally will receive better credit terms and service due to the greater competition among providers of agricultural real estate credit that is fostered by the secondary market.

Because the farm mortgages are securitized, farmers will have the valuable option of a long-term, fixed-rate mortgage for the purchase of farmland.

Commercial agricultural lenders can originate and sell more long-term farm mortgages, while retaining the servicing with the farm borrowers, without impairing their immediate liquidity or their capacity to meet farmers' needs for operating and equipment financing as the agricultural economy recovers.

Smaller agricultural banks can use the secondary market to diversify their income to healthier levels and increase their lending amounts to individual farmers.

The Farm Credit System can offer long-term, fixed-rate mortgages without risking the mismatch of their loan assets and bond liabilities that caused a substantial part of the System's present financial difficulties.

H.R. 3030 includes a number of safeguards to ensure safe and sound operation of the market:

The new secondary farm mortgage market will be regulated by the Farm Credit Administration, and the securities sold in the market will be subject to Federal and State securities laws.

The permanent 15-member Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation Board will be composed of: 5 members elected by stockholders representing insurance companies, banks or other financial institutions; 5 members elected by stockholders representing the Farm Credit System; and 5 members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

No loan may be pooled in the secondary market if it exceeds $2.5 million or 1,000 acres, whichever is greater. In no case may any loan be included if it exceeds 2% of the total amount in the pool, or if it is based on a loan-to-value ratio in excess of 80%.

The bill also provides that mortgages on single family, moderate priced residences in communities below 2,500 inhabitants may be sold in this secondary market.

In addition, the bill also establishes a similar new secondary market for government guaranteed certificates representing pooled private-sector farm loans guaranteed under the existing Farmers Home Administration guaranteed loan program.

FARM CREDIT SYSTEM ORGANIZATIONAL IMPROVEMENTS

H.R. 3030 establishes an insurance program for System institutions similar to the FDIC program for commercial banks, and authority is provided for FCS institutions to improve the way their business operations are capitalized.

Farm Credit Administration regulation is strengthened through such provisions as the imposition of capital adequacy requirements and new civil money penalties. System institutions with more than 20 employees would be required to adopt affirmative action hiring practices similar to those applying to Federal Government contractors.

The bill contains the framework for a reorganization of the Farm Credit System designed to reduce overhead costs and provide a more streamlined credit delivery system for farmer-borrowers.

Highlights of the reorganization plan include:

The required merger of the Federal Land Bank and Federal Intermediate Credit Bank in each of the 12 districts within six months after enactment;

A referendum among voting stockholders of the current 12 districts on reorganizing the FCS district structure down to no less than 6 districts, and

The vote would take place within 18 months after enactment on a comprehensive reorganization plan developed by a special committee composed of a representative from each district and the Federal Assistance Board.

A referendum of the stockholders on the merger of each Production Credit Association and Federal Land Bank Association within a district serving substantially the same geographic area within 6 months after the district FLB and FICB are merged;

A referendum of the stockholders of the banks for cooperatives on a plan to merge into a National Bank for Cooperatives within 12 months after enactment; and

Broad authority for voluntary merger within the system before or after the required mergers and referendums.

SACRED HEART PARISH CELEBRATES 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to announce to this Chamber that on January 1, Sacred Heart Parish, Newburgh, NY, will close a year of celebration marking the 75th anniversary of the parish. I would like to briefly outline the origins of the parish and special events this year that testify to the balance of historical and contemporary elements that bind the young and old of the church.

Sacred Heart originated on June 21, 1912, and its initial aim was to serve the needs of a community of Italian immigrants. What started with a temporary chapel founded in a vacant storefront on Washington Street in Newburgh has developed into an integrated parish of 1,600 families who congregate in a very handsome church dedicated in 1965. The Sacred Heart School, dedicated in 1951, educates more than 200 students, grades kindergarten through eighth, and provides religious education to more than 600 students from public schools.

Over the past year, the parish has been remembering how it started and the original Italian/immigrant parishioners that were its base. It also continues to serve the present community in innovative ways. In September, Sacred Heart held a gathering for senior parishioners age 75 and older. The seniors, who were just beginning their lives when the parish began its life, shared their memories and some of their life experiences. A homemade manicotti dinner, a common event in the earlier days of the parish, attracted 600 people. Along the same theme, the parish organized a picnic and a communion breakfast at which more than 300 members of the parish enjoyed good food and a bit of Sacred Heart nostalgia. All of the celebrations have been videotaped for posterity.

The anniversary year, inaugurated on February 2, 1987, will come to an official closing with a noon mass on January 1, 1988. After the mass, a time capsule, prepared by students of the Sacred Heart School, will be buried. It will be opened in the year 2012 on the 100th anniversary of the parish. The capsule contains publicity booklets from this year's events, press clippings, lists of those confirmed and graduated, a roster from the school, a 32-page comprehensive parish history and photos from the year's celebrations. Besides helping to prepare the time capsule, the students put on a lip-sync music program dedicated to the 75th anniversary.

I am extremely proud of the sense of heritage and the community spirit that exists at Sacred Heart. The roots of the parish, its older parishioners, and the buds on the new branches, the youngsters, are both thriving on the Sacred Heart tree.

HARMONIZED SYSTEM DELAYED

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Congress could implement the new harmonized system of tariffs this year to join our trading partners who are set to implement the system on January 2, 1988. As far as I am aware, there is no opposition to this legislation.

Unfortunately, however, the legislation was opposed by Senate leaders who felt sections of the omnibus trade bill should not be broken off before its completion next year. There was also complaint that the administration had not promoted the legislation in a timely or aggressive manner.

I believe the opposition is unjustified on the latter point. The administration has promoted implementation of the harmonized system for months. A bill to implement the system was sent up to the Congress in June.

The administration was told by both staff members of the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee that there was no chance of promoting the HS separately, but that implementation would occur as part of the omnibus trade bill. When it became evident that the trade bill would not be passed in 1987, the administration did aggressively promote its passage as a separate bill, or as an amendment to another piece of legislation.

The administration followed Hill advice on this issue. The blame for our inability to pass it lies solely with the Congress itself.

IMPORTANT PROGRESS MADE ON VISA LIBERALIZATION

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate my full support for the actions taken last week on the State Department Reauthorization bill which puts us moving in the right direction on the all important issue of visa liberalization.

Specifically, I wish to express my total agreement with the amendment which will impose a 1-year moratorium on the denial of visas for persons solely on the basis of their past or current political beliefs and or associations. It is hoped that during this 1-year moratorium that continued progress can be made on more comprehensive legislation to amend the McCarren-Walter Act which has been responsible for this policy.

The issue involved here is a fundamental one. For those Americans who have been denied the ability to hear the views and thoughts of a person because their visa to enter the United States was denied, the United States is engaging in a form of censorship. The policy is inimical to our democratic principles and practices and must be changed.

One group that has been affected by the current visa policies are those Irish Americans with a concern about the problems in the north of Ireland. Systematically, over the past 15 years, some segments of political thought in Ireland have been exclued from this Nation while others have carte blanche access to our shores. It is an inconsistent policy which causes something less than a full and free exchange of views on this all important subject.

I sincerely hope that once this measure becomes law groups will test it right away to see if it has teeth. The Government will still have the right to bar entry for a person who has committed terrorist acts—as compared to being a member of an organization—or who is likely to commit them in the United States. However, there are others in the Irish and Northern Ireland political community who are not involved with terrorism who have been denied entry into the United States. It is time to test this new law.

I wish to especially commend my good friend and colleague BARNEY FRANK for his outstanding leadership on this issue.

LET ARTISTS HAVE A FAIR SHARE OF THEIR PROFITS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, our colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] has long been a knowledgeable and sophisticated defender of the rights of artists. He understands the importance of proper recognition of the needs of artists if our society is to continue to draw sustenance from them.

In pursuit of his efforts on behalf of those who create, Mr. MARKEY wrote an article on behalf of the Visual Artists Rights Act which is sponsored by himself and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. Mr. MARKEY'S article presents the case with force and clarity. His efforts on behalf of efforts are important and deserve wide recognition and discussion, so I ask that the article in question be reprinted here.

[From The New York Times, Dec. 20, 1987]

LET ARTISTS HAVE A FAIR SHARE OF THEIR PROFITS

(By Edward J. Markey)

Last year, two owners of an Australian mail-order firm known as Subdivision Art brought a 1959 Picasso linocut print entitled "Trois Femmes." The purpose was to cut it into 500 pieces, each one inch square, and sell them for $135 apiece—complete with a certificate of authenticity and a 30-day money-back guarantee. They placed newspaper ads which read: "Yes, your own beautiful framed Picasso piece, in the most original and exciting offer in the history of Australian art. And you can own a piece of the work yourself." One of these enterpreneurs, David Robertson, was quoted as saying, "If this thing takes off, we may buy other masters as well and given them the chop."

Consider another episode. In 1969, a painting by Robert Mangold was sold for $800. The Gallery collected a 50 percent commission, leaving the artist $400. Last year, that piece sold at auction for $80,000. Robert Mangold, who created the work, received nothing.

These incidents illustrate a gap in copyright protection for visual artists. Visual artists make an enormous contribution to the culture and national life of our country. Yet, even if their works are greatly appreciated, the rights of the artist are inadequately protected. Unlike the work of literary or performing artists, art created by sculptors, painters and graphic artists are treated more as physical objects than expressions of the artistic creativity of the authors. To correct this legal deficiency, I have introduced a bill known as the Visual Artists' Rights Act in the House of Representatives. Senator Kennedy has introduced identical legislation in the Senate. By amending copyright law with respect to copyright notice, moral rights and resale royalties, this bill seeks to protect the artist's right to the integrity of his work and to benefit from its commerical success.

The first provision of the legislation would eliminate the requirement that an artist prominently affix a copyright notice to his work in order to get copyright protection.

Second, the bill would codify moral rights for visual artists, recognizing the artist's interest in maintaining the integrity of his work. The artist would be given the right to bring a civil copyright claim for willful destruction or mutilation of his work.

But maintaining the integrity of their work is not the only area where visual artists receive inadequate protection; they also lack the right to participate economically in the growing value of their work. Novelists collect royalties on their books. Composers get royalties from their pieces. Musicians and singers get royalties from their recordings and performances. Painters and sculptors, too, should receive royalties from their commercially successful pieces.

The Visual Artists' Rights Act provides that if a work of art worth more than $1,000 is resold for a profit of 50 percent or more, the artist should get a royalty of 7 percent of the profit. This resale royalty is probably the most contentious provision of the bill, because it involves money. Let us be frank. There is a lot of money being made in the art world. The problem is that too little of it ever gets to the artist.

A work of art is not a utilitarian object, like a toaster; it is a creative work, like a song, a poem or a novel. We should not pretend that all connection between the artist and the creation is severed the first time the work is sold. "Out the Window," by Japser Johns, did not sell for $3.6 million because its canvas and paint are unusually valuable; it is valued highly because it embodies the creative effort of a particular artist.

Artists should benefit from the success of their work, which embodies their intellectual property. Currently, in a typical situation where the resale royalty in our legislation would apply, everyone seems to profit from the artist's efforts except the artist. The seller, who didn't create the work, makes a 50 percent profit on it. The dealer, who didn't create the work, gets a 10 percent commission. The government, which didn't create the work, collects an 8½ percent sales tax. Why shouldn't the artist, who created the work, get a 7 percent share of the profit on his own work?

Some argue that giving the artist a small royalty on large resale profits on his works somehow ultimately will hurt the artist by wrecking the art market in America. Yet American art has managed to survive despite the 10 percent premiums from buyers and larger commissions from consignors that art dealers charge. Art dealers argue that a 7 percent resale royalty will drive the art resale business to London. They do not explain why the 8½ percent sales tax in New York City has not driven the art resale market to New Hampshire.

In the words of Shelley, artists are "in one sense, the creators, and, in another, the creations, of their age." The state of the arts ought to be an important matter of public concern. By channeling some of the profits made from art back to those who create it and by giving artists some protection for the integrity of their work, the Visual Artists' Rights Act will help sustain and encourage the arts. This is not just a matter of fairness to artists; it is a matter of supporting part of our civilization.

ALLOW FTC TO ANALYZE THE INSURANCE INDUSTRY

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that would allow the Federal Trade Commission [FTC] to analyze the insurance industry. I find it literally incredible that the FTC, the leading Federal consumer agency, is prohibited by law from even conducting a study of the insurance industry—especially when it has such a profound impact upon our economy—it grossed over $310 billion in 1986 and accounted for over 8 percent of our gross national product.

Even though the FTC has primary responsibility for protecting consumers from deceptive or anticompetitive business practices, it has been barred from investigating this industry without specific mandate from Congress since 1980. During the late 1970's, the FTC did conduct studies of the insurance industry, looking at deceptive insurance advertising practices, discrimination in obtaining insurance, and rates of return on life insurance.

These studies documented a number of interesting facts which were understandably not well-received by the insurance industry and which led them to mount a campaign to repeal the FTC's ability to investigate it. For example, one such study revealed that the rate of return on whole life insurance policies was only about 1.3 percent. Another study, which was never completed, focused on the fairness of risk classification and pricing in the area of private passenger automobile insurance. This industry pressure, along with the general Federal antiregulatory climate, unfortunately led Congress to include a provision in the FTC Improvements Act of 1980 that stated there could be no study of the insurance industry unless the House of Senate Commerce Committee specifically requested it.

As a result, the FTC has been unable to carry out any comprehensive analysis of the insurance industry's practices over the past 7 years. During the recent liability insurance crisis, when the insurance industry drastically increased its liability insurance premium rates and refused to even underwrite certain lines of insurance, the FTC was unable to analyze the causes of these rate increases and unavailability of liability coverage.

When the insurance industry mounted a massive nationwide $6 million advertising campaign to present its claim that the cause of the insurance crisis was an increase in tort litigation—through a series of horror stories about alleged court cases—the FTC was unable to ascertain if this advertising was, in fact, truthful or deceptive. When the insurance industry argued that it was being economically injured due to this alleged increase in tort litigation, the FTC did not have the authority to study these industry claims.

As a consequence, the Federal Government has abdicated its responsibility to help protect the rights of consumers who could not find insurance or could not find affordable insurance. In addition, in recent years, the FTC's current lack of knowledge about insurance industry conditions and operations greatly hinders Congress' ability to understand the causes of the liability insurance crisis and, even more importantly, to develop appropriate legislative solutions to ensure that such a crisis does not occur in the future.

My proposed legislation would allow the FTC to carry out such analyses of the insurance industry. This bill, simply stated, removes the current restriction on the authority of the FTC over the business of insurance.

This bill does not create any Federal regulatory apparatus over the insurance industry. States would continue to retain their insurance regulatory authority. However, it does give the FTC the ability to carry out a Federal oversight function to ensure the adequate protection of all American consumers. The recent crisis did not occur within just one State's boundaries—it was national in scope—and no individual State had the necessary resources to analyze this national problem. Rather, in order to understand the crisis and the continuing cyclical instabilities in the insurance marketplace, national studies of the operation of this industry are needed.

It is also important to remember that the FTC is not restricted in its authority with respect to other industries. For example, the FTC does not need permission to study the auto industry, the chemical industry, the oil industry, the medical profession, and so forth. Therefore, it does not make sense for the FTC to be so restricted when it comes to the insurance industry.

Since 1980, this restriction has meant that the Federal Government lacks sufficient knowledge of the structure and operation of the insurance industry to adequately protect consumers. And in 1984, when the liability insurance crisis hit, this lack of information created a scandalous situation in which the Federal Government accepted the industry's agreements about the need for tort reform without any empirical supporting evidence. Ridiculous.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to allow the FTC to analyze the financial and other practices of the industry. I am joined in my argument by the Chairman of the FTC, Daniel Oliver, who favors this extension of FTC authority and argues that it is now time to hold the insurance industry to the same standards of business conduct that govern other American industries. We must continue to protect consumers of insurance in the same way that we protect consumers of virtually every other product and service.

FORMER REFUSENIK VLADIMIR LIFSHITZ' TESTIMONY SUBMITTED TO THE HELSINKI COMMISSION ON DECEMBER 4, 1987

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I have been actively involved in efforts to free Soviet Jews since before my election to Congress. In July 1986 I "adopted" the case of Vladimir Lifshitz, a long-time refusenik. On his behalf, I sent several letters to General Secretary Gorbachev and other Soviet authorities requesting that Mr. Lifshitz and his family be allowed to emigrate. Fortunately, permission to emigrate was finally granted and Vladimir was allowed to leave the Soviet Union in November 1987. On December 3, I had the opportunity to meet Vladimir on the steps of the Capitol. The next day, Vladimir Lifshitz presented his testimony to the Helsinki Commission regarding the Soviet Union and Human Rights under glasnost.

All of us wonder what the future holds in terms of the promise of glasnost. Will this new Soviet openess mean open borders? Will it mean the right of all people to live in peace with the freedom to practice their religion? It is still too soon to know the answers to these questions. Vladimir Lifshitz and his family lived in the Soviet Union all of their lives until this November. They have lived under glasnost. Today, I would like to share with all of my colleagues Vladimir Lifshitz's testimony about human rights and glasnost.

TESTIMONY OF VLADIMIR LIFSHITZ, FORMERLY OF LENINGRAD, FOR THE HELSINKI COMMISSION, DECEMBER 4, 1987

1. Do you think that Soviet officials will be sensitive to human rights after the Summit?

Soviet officials will try to bargain with the United States in different areas and only to this end will they address human rights. They are not now, nor will they be, sensitive to human rights issues without linkage to trade and arms control.

2. To what extent do you suppose that Gorbachev's glasnost was instituted because of the Soviet economy?

I am sure that the Soviet economy, which is, in my opinion worsening now, is the decisive factor in the Soviet policy on human rights. Even some Soviet economists have stated that there cannot be any real improvement in the economy without changing the role of the Communist Party in its management. If this is so, it presents a test for Gorbachev who is a party man and cannot lessen the privileges of Party workers which are based on the Party's total control in the management of the economy (the prime source of their power.)

Two years ago, people on the street in the Soviet Union believed in Gorbachev. They expected changes in their living standards but now they are deeply disappointed with the realities. Moreover, there is growing anger and dissatisfaction among the people and in a short time the Soviet leaders will need a scapegoat to channel this anger.

Since the time of the Czars, the traditional scapegoat on the Russian scene has been the Jews. Not only I, but my friends as well, see it coming. Some leaders on the highest levels have begun to prepare public opinion to place the blame on the Jews for all the mistakes and misfortunes coming down upon them. Gorbachev laid the groundwork long ago for a scapegoat in the event of his failure. The campaign includes a growing number of anti-Semitic publications in the official press, in books, on TV and the public media—much more than two years ago.

Anti-Semitic publications are a traditional tool of Soviet officials. There are some new methods. Officially not under the control of the State, nationalistic organizations like PAMYAT, have proliferated. PAMYAT has some 12,000 members, most of them highly educated people, scientists, professors. They blame all the difficulties of life in the Soviet Union on the Jews. For example, they blame Jews for the problem of alcoholism in Russia. In a book by Professor Ugelov, a famous Soviet surgeon, it is alleged that there were a high percentage of Jewish merchants who sold alcohol. The number was taken from an anti-Semitic book published at the turn of the century. Even in this book there was a much lower percentage number because Jews were permitted to live in only a very small part of the country where they were not permitted to engage in agriculture or industry. In Ugelov's book, areas were out of proportion to numbers.

Only a year ago, a publication appeared alleging that Jewish doctors make Russian babies ingest alcohol to make alcoholics out of them. They based their allegation on the contention that Jewish doctors prescribed "hafir" (sic), which, according to published articles, contains alcohol.

PAMYAT is an anti-Semitic society for the upper intelligentsia. But there are Hitlerist and Fascist groups for young illiterate people. This very year, around Hitler's birthday, these groups vandalized Jewish cemeteries in Leningrad on four separate occasions. The existence of these societies would have been impossible without support from the highest echelons.

PAMYAT is still allowed to meet in official halls. None of its leaders have been dismissed from their positions. At the same time, any attempt to protest against anti-Semitic propaganda is suppressed immediately. For example, recent attempts by Jews of Leningrad and Moscow to demonstrate against such anti-Semitic activities were suppressed before they started. The few who did show up at the demonstration sites were detained immediately by the militia. Some of the organizers were held by the militia from three to ten hours.

STATEMENT OF H.R. 3030

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, due to a technical error on the part of the staff when assembling the statement of managers for H.R. 3030, the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, language that had been agreed to in conference relating to the agricultural mortgage secondary market was inadvertently dropped from the printed statement. I refer to a statement by the conferees that reiterated the intent of Senate report language in Senate Report 100-230. The language that had been agreed upon stated that the conferees intend that the standards set forth in the title under which loan poolers may become certified agricultural marketing facilities are not intended to preclude entities with minimal experience in facility activities, or entities not already engaged in facility activities, from becoming qualified loan poolers where they can show the resources needed to meet the standards for certification. It is expected that new entrants to the market will be encouraged by the establishment of the Mortgage Corporation and the secondary market and the standards for certification are to be applied accordingly.

The conferees do not intend to restrict participation as certified marketing facilities to existing primary dealers in U.S. securities. The conferees further do not intend that capital standards for certified marketing facilities be set at a level that would exclude small and intermediate-sized financial institutions; institutions whose market base includes rural or agricultural communities. Not is it the intent of the conferees that purchases of stock in the Mortgage Corporation be required as a condition for certification.

Further, the conferees stated that they intend that representatives of regional financial institutions be considered for membership on the interim and permanent Board of Directors of the Mortgage Corporation. These representatives play an important role in institutions that deal with hundreds of rural banks on a day-to-day basis. Many of these individuals are experts in designing pooled mortgages and asset backed securities for distribution in the national capital markets. Their experience and expertise will be very helpful in the management of the Mortgage Corporation throughout its formative and permanent stages.

As the President considers his appointments to the interim and permanent board of directors and as the standards are set forth for certified agricultural mortgage marketing facilities, this agreement of the conferees should be taken into consideration.

THE PASSING OF MRS. GEORGE (HELEN) MAHON

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, last week Mrs. George (Helen) Mahon passed away. She was the wife of the former chairman of the House Appropriations Committee the Honorable George Mahon.

Helen Mahon was a lovely, down-to-earth, gentle lady who added grace and dignity to the Capitol scene for almost a half century. She and George Mahon were two of the most respected and loved members of the community and the U.S. Congress.

I doubt that any one couple has ever made a greater contribution to or is more respected for their achievements in this body and for good government than this wonderful couple. Those of us who have served with George and Helen will always remember these special people and the services they rendered. And, we send our regrets to Helen's family and to their many friends in Texas and indeed throughout the world.

As long as the people can send to Congress people like George and Helen Mahon, then democracy will flourish and grow stronger.

HELEN MAHON

COLORADO CITY.—Services are set for 11 a.m. Saturday at the First United Methodist Church for Helen Mahon, widow of long-time U.S. Rep. George Mahon: Officiating ministers are Rev. Mark Rickman of Lubbock and Rev. Julius Early of Colorado City. Burial will follow at Loraine Cemetery under the direction of Kiker-Seale Funeral Home.

Mrs. Mahon died at noon Thursday at her home in Colorado City. She was 86.

Mahon served as congressman from a vast West Texas District that one included Michell and Scurry Counties. His tenure in Washington dated from 1933 until his retirement in 1978. Mahon died Nov. 19, 1985 in a San Angelo Hospital.

Mrs. Mahon was a native of Floresville, Tex. and a graduate of Loraine High School. She received her degree from San Marcos State Teachers College.

Western Texas College in Snyder has a memorial scholarship in honor of George and Helen Mahon.

Survivors include a daughter, Daphne Mahon Holt of Dallas and a nephew, Malvin Stevenson of Snyder.

PASTORAL LETTER ON AIDS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, moved by their own personal encounters with persons afflicted with AIDS, California's Catholic bishops have written an enlightened and compassionate pastoral letter on AIDS to the Catholic community of California. I am proud to share it with my colleagues.

A CALL TO COMPASSION—PASTORAL LETTER ON AIDS TO THE CATHOLIC COMMUNITY OF CALIFORNIA

Jesus assured His disciples He would be with them to the end of time (Mt. 28:20). He calls us to recognize His presence among us, particulary in the poor, the outcast and the ill, and to respond to Him by our concrete love for them. He invites us to participate in His mission of mercy and compassion.

"The joys and hopes the griefs and anxieties of the people of this age, especially those who are poor or in any way afflicted, these, too, are the joys and hopes the griefs and anxieties of the followers of Christ." (Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World, No. 1.)

With these words the second Vatican Council reaffirmed the necessary involvement of the followers of Christ, both in the communal life of the church and as individuals, with the daily lives of men and women everywhere. This inseparable connection reflects Christ's most intimate union with us. His incarnate presence binds us to the struggles of those with whom we share our lives.

The rapid outbreak of the unprecedented epidemic of AIDS has affected Californians in an extraordinary fashion. As Surgeon General Koop observed in his recent address to our legislators (March 5, 1987), "Californians were the first of our citizens back in June of 1981, to be identified as being the victims of AIDS. they were among the first to die of the disease, and before the rest of our country knew about—or truly understood the nature of—this catastrophe, the people of California were already beginning to bury their dead."

We, your bishops, have been profoundly moved by this crisis, and especially by our personal encounters with persons with AIDS. Several of us have written pastoral letters for our own dioceses, having experienced how this epidemic touches individuals their families and society at large, for "if one member suffers, all suffer together" (I Cor. 12:26). For some time now we have wanted to write a pastoral letter precisely as the California Catholic Conference, offering our reflections for the prayerful consideration of the entire Catholic community of California. We hope, by this means, to promote an understanding of AIDs, to allay irrational fears, to ponder this epidemic within the framework of our Catholic faith, and to explore with you ways in which we may be called as disciples of Jesus Christ to respond to the vicims of AIDS, their families and loved ones.

CHRISTIAN RESPONSE TO ILLNESS

Beyond our responsibility as individual citizens to become informed about AIDS and to work toward its prevention and treatment, as disciples of Jesus we bear a special responsibility to care for the sick, to show them they are loved, and to assure that they are treated with dignity and respect. They are sisters and brothers of Jesus and bear a special resemblance to Him because of their suffering.

Both scripture and tradition abound with models for responding to those who are ill. At the heart of any Christian response we find unconditional love and compassion.

There were no conditions placed on Jesus' expression of concern for the outcasts and the wounded of His world. If we are to follow His example, our response to those who are ill should be that of compassion, not of judgment.

"And his disciples asked him, 'Rabbi, who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?' Jesus answered, 'it was not that this man sinned, or his parents, but that the works of God might be made manifest in him.' " (John 9:2-3)

Moved by compassion to communicate concretely the unconditional love of God, Jesus proceeded to open the eyes of this man born blind. He healed the lame, cured lepers, expelled demons, brought sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf, all without judging individuals or imputing blame. We are called to respond with that same love for those who in our day suffer from this new and deadly disease of AIDS.

Just as we believe the Lord is vividly present to us in the weak and ill, we also recall that by offering back the burden of infirmity to the Father who gives us life, the sick can in some sense share in the mission of Jesus' ongoing redemption:

"Now I rejoice in my suffering for your sake, and in my flesh I complete what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of his body, that is, the Church." (Col. 1:24)

Because the sick will be saved "by personal faith and the faith of the church," we are reminded that it is not only health personnel and pastors who bear responsibility for attending to the infirm. "It is especially fitting that all baptized Christians share in this ministry of mutual charity within the Body of Christ by showing love for the sick, and by celebrating the sacraments with them." (NCCB "Decree on Pastoral Care of the Sick," Jan. 28, 1983, No. 33)

"Is any among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith will save the sick, and the Lord will raise him up, and if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven." (James 5:14-15)

By providing direct care, by visiting, by offering our prayers, and by sharing in the Eucharist and the Sacrament of Anointing, we can offer our companionship, along with the refreshment and reconciliation of the Lord.

NEED TO DISPEL IRRATIONAL FEARS

"A leper approached Jesus with a request, kneeling down as he addressed him: if you will do so, you can cure me. Moved with pity, Jesus stretched out his hand, touched him, and said: I do will it. Be cured." (Mark 1:40-41)

When he came across those who were sick, the Lord engaged in an immediate, direct, hands-on ministry of healing. We are called, likewise, to touch our ailing brothers and sisters in those ways which present themselves to us in the circumstances of our daily lives, our ministries and occupations. But many fears, some irrational, play in us as individuals and as community, when we approach persons with AIDS. We need to acknowledge these fears and confront them. The first thing we need to do is learn some basic facts about AIDS.

We urge you to read and study the Surgeon General's Report on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome published last fall by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Written in "plain English," this document provides a clear biological and medical explanation of the nature of AIDS and AIDS-Related Complex (ARC), how the disease is transmitted, and how its spread can be prevented. The Surgeon General would be the first to insist that this report is a technical medical document, not a set of moral guidelines. Like all technical studies which touch on such intimate and sacred areas as human sexuality, the report needs to be studied in a moral context. Our letter will help to provide that moral context.

Irrational fear should be dispelled especially by the medical judgment that one cannot become infected with the AIDS virus by casual contact. On the other hand, the Surgeon General's Report makes it clear that fear can be useful when it helps people avoid behavior that puts them at risk for AIDS. And so, avoidance of illicit use of drugs, sexual abstinence before marriage and monogamous fidelity within marriage recommended themselves as medically wise as well as morally responsible. The recovery of the virtue of chastity may be one of the most urgent needs of contemporary society.

Reading the accumulated body of medical information in the light of the Gospel, we offer the following specific recommendations.

PRAYER

We affirm the role and importance of intercessory prayer and fasting in the life of the church, and encourage daily prayer for all with AIDS, for their families and loved ones. We urge parishes to include in their regular Prayer of the Faithful the needs of those affected by the AIDS epidemic, and to offer their spiritual as well as temporal assistance by prayer and fasting.

COMPANIONSHIP AND TEMPORAL ASSISTANCE

We acknowledge and encourage the continued efforts of individuals and groups who make themselves available in a variety of practical ways: by providing companionship, household help, transportation, economic assistance, pastoral care, family support, bereavement counseling, medical care and research, and educational outreach. These persons truly extend the hands to the community, comforting with the tenderness of the Master Healer our ailing sisters and brothers.

SPECIAL CONCERN FOR HOMOSEXUAL* PERSONS

We urge that special attention be given to those at high risk of contracting the AIDS virus. For some time in California the most obvious high risk individuals will continue to be members of the homosexual community, some of whom have been separated from the church and its spiritual life. We regret this distance, and long to heal their wounds by offering our support and fellowship. We encourage special preparation for all engaged in ministry or in service to homosexual persons in order to reduce the understandable fear and anxiety associated with AIDS-ARC. We suggest special training to make caregivers more sensitive to the needs of this group. We have learned from the generous manner in which the homosexual community has responded by providing support services and education.

Those at risk for AIDS because of their use of intravenous drugs also call for our special attention. We embrace them fully as they struggle under the double burden of illness and addiction (and, if they are homosexual, often a triple burden). We offer our assistance in their infirmity as well as our confidence in the Lord's power to release them from the captivity of substance abuse.

HEALTH CARE WORKERS AND INSTITUTIONS

We commend Catholic hospitals for exerting leadership in developing AIDS services which provide nonjudgmental and sensitive care. Since anxiety among health care workers appears to diminish as they are able to spend more extended and interactive time with AIDS patients, attention should be given to providing adequate preparation, ongoing support and education to all health providers and auxiliary workers, especially for those whose contact with patients tends to be brief or of a more technical nature.

Community-based support services such as hospices, home care, and volunteer help can decrease the time AIDS patients spend in the hospital. We encourage the further development of church and community resources which allow patients who so choose to receive their care and to share time with family and friends in a more familiar and dignified setting.

PREGNANT WOMEN

The implications of the AIDS epidemic for pregnancy and delivery are profound. It has been estimated that two-thirds of pregnancies in mothers infected with the AIDS virus may result in infection in the babies in their wombs. There is also evidence suggesting that pregnancy itself may be a risk factor for the progression of AIDS in infected women who do not yet have symptoms. These maternal and fetal considerations bring significant complexity to counseling in the area of sexual activity as well as prenatal and obstetric care, requiring ongoing collaborative research and reflection by health providers and pastoral ministers.

AIDS IN PRISONS

We should be aware that some people in our prisons have been infected by the AIDS virus, and that a number of them suffer from AIDS or ARC. This reality increases the need for especially sensitive pastoral care within the prison setting, and for education which can minimize prejudicial treatment and harassment, and prevent further spread of the virus. Almost half of prisoners with AIDS have died while in custody of the correctional system. This situation cries out for the development and maintenance of an AIDS hospice program in which to care for severely or terminally ill prisoners in a humane and compassionate environment.

OUR RESPONSE TO THE FAMILIES OF THOSE AFFECTED BY AIDS

With Mary, who held her broken son at the foot of the cross, our community grieves with the parents, partners, families and friends of those persons afflicted by AIDS. Our ailing brothers and sisters who have fallen victims to this disease are often taken from our midst in what should be their most vigorous years. Their youth makes the burden of their sickness and death even harder to bear for their families and friends.

The tragedy of an AIDS diagnosis may be the precipitating event by which a child becomes known to his or her family as a homosexual person or a drug user. Parents and siblings may find this difficult to accept, sometimes responding with incredulity and rejection. We are called to lend our practical, emotional, and spiritual support to such families. Our hearts must go out to those families weakened by anger or sorrow who cannot accept the reality of their loved one having AIDS. Reminding them by our ministry that human dignity comes from God, and that we believe each person is sacred—a unique reflection of God among us—we can encourage them to accept these persons with AIDS back within their embrace. Other families might find the courage and strength to provide care in their homes for those incapacitated by AIDS.

*Conscious of the problem of finding the most appropriate terminology, this letter uses the term "homosexual" without prejudice to any individuals or groups or to their debt to call themselves "gay men" or "lesbian women."

However families struggle to deal with the painful realities of this illness, we can aid by offering practical assistance such as shopping, cleaning and respite time, as well as our emotional and spiritual support to families and loved ones strained by illness and bereavement, and housing for those who come from other parts of the country.

FROM IRRATIONAL REACTION TO EFFECTIVE RESPONSE

Clearly, AIDS is a crisis of immense proportions which not only threatens individual lives, but strains the very bonds of trust upon which our common life depends. Beyond its obvious and tragic impact on the health of infected individuals, AIDS has subtly augmented our culture's pervasive sense of insecurity. Similar to the manner in which the specter of possible nuclear destruction has resulted in a heightened level of generalized anxiety, so has the arrival of this deadly virus—which threatens all sectors of the population from infants to the elderly—added to the stress of our age. And, as many other epidemics have done in the past, the AIDS phenomenon provides a focus for the projection of fears and prejudices against infected persons and those in already marginated high-risk groups. Accordingly, despite all evidence that this virus is not easily transmitted, there have been some inappropriate reactions such as attempts to bar children with AIDS from schools, eviction from housing, loss of medical and life insurance or insurability, and denial of access to medical care and emergency medical transportation. Further, there has been threatened or actual loss of employment, movements to quarantine those who are infected or who might be infected, physical violence, rejection by pastoral ministers, and even refusal by undertakers to bury the dead.

Two avenues which offer us effective means of reducing both the epidemic's spread and impact on our society are education and legislation.

We urge those engaged in educational ministries at all levels to cooperate with parents in developing interdisciplinary programs in conformity with the moral teaching of the Church for the prevention of further spread of the virus.

Schools and places of employment have been affected by fear of AIDS and its spread. Based on an understanding of the modes of transmission of the AIDS virus, medical opinion developed in concert with the National Congress of Parents and Teachers supports the safety of in-school education for children infected with the AIDS virus. Similar data provide the basis for medical opinion regarding the safety of infected persons within the work environment. We support these guidelines and encourage teachers, school administrators and employers to familiarize themselves with this information in order to guarantee access to education and employability for people with AIDS, as well as to minimize tensions in school, office or factory which are based on a lack of information.

Further, we oppose irrational, inappropriate and misguided efforts to quarantine persons affected by this virus, and support the maintenance of confidentiality in order that competent professional personnel might be able to counsel and advise in a climate free of fear.

Finally, we advocate legislation at all governmental levels which supports research into HIV therapies and a preventative vaccine; promotes appropriate AIDS education in health and school programs directed toward the general public and also developed especially for those in high risk groups; supports community-based and home-care services; provides disability and health care coverage for persons with ARC as well as those with AIDS; guarantees rights to employment, housing, insurance, transportation and education for infected persons.

CONCLUSION

The griefs and anxieties of persons affected by the AIDS virus touch each of us. We experience anew our human fragility as we witness and embrace the suffering of our sisters and brothers influenced by this epidemic. In this tragedy we hear echoes of the torment of Rachel:

"A voice is heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping. Rachel is weeping for her children; she refuses to be comforted for her children, because they are not." (Jeremiah 31:15)

People with AIDS/ARC remind us that they are not distant unfamiliar victims to be pitied or shunned, but persons who deserve to remain within our communal consciousness and to be embraced with unconditional love.

We hope and pray that sooner or later this epidemic will be eliminated by the development of effective treatments and a vaccine. Until that time, we must courageously and responsibly accommodate ourselves to the reality of an epidemic, remodeling personal and institutional commitments as necessary. We dedicate ourselves and our resources to spiritual support, to practical care, and to educational efforts designed to reduce prejudice and to stop the spread of the disease. We beg the Spirit for inspiration, courage and humility as we respond to this situaton, desiring that through our actions the Kingdom might come more fully into the world:

"Then the just will ask Him, 'Lord, when did we see you hungry and feed you or see you thirsty and give you drink? When did we welcome you away from home or clothe you in your nakedness? When did we visit you when you were ill or in prison?' The king will answer them: 'I assure you, as often as you did it for one of my least brothers, you did it for me.'" (Matthew 25:37-40)

We hope this letter proves helpful to you in addressing the AIDS epidemic with faith, hope and unconditional love. Aware of its many inadequacies, we invite your critical response to assist us in more faithfully carrying out our pastoral mission.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. Stennis].

U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C., December 22, 1987.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable William Proxmire, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

John C. Stennis,
President pro tempore.

Mr. PROXMIRE thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader and I have been discussing the call that we will be making to the President later today, in conformity with the custom, tradition, and practice, to inform the President that the Senate has completed its business and to ask if he has any further requests to make.

We have decided that we will wait until about 3:30 or 4 o'clock, because the President will not be in a position, I am told, prior to such an hour to assure us that he does not have further business and that he will sign the two big measures that were sent down yesterday—the CR and the reconciliation measure.

So, until then, we will probably stand in recess from time to time and dispose of any other business.

I yield to the distinguished Republican leader, if he has anything to say.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I reaffirm what the majority leader has stated. I hope it is on the early side of 4. If we can do it earlier, it will be very helpful to my schedule.

In any event, we need to find out whether the President is going to sign the CR and the reconciliation. That is more important than any other schedule.

So, I will be in constant touch with the majority leader, to see what we can do.

There was one unanimous-consent request. I am not certain that it has been cleared.

THE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I want to thank our Chaplain again. His prayer was the capstone to the session, a somewhat contentious session at times. But, overall, I think we can be thankful that it ended on a good note, a note of compromise and a willingness to work together, which I think may set a pattern, hopefully, for the year to come, in which there will be many important issues and, of course, issues that might also be contentious.

But in all of these things, we heard the sweet note that came from the Scriptures, so eloquently stated by our Chaplain. It was just the right touch, reminding us that, after all, there are higher things and things more important than the temporal and the material.

I know that all our hearts go out in gratitude for the promise, the wonderful promise, of that prayer.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

(Mr. ADAMS assumed the chair.)

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I join the majority leader in commending the Chaplain for his superb prayers that he has given us every morning. I have heard most of them, and they have been a source of inspiration.

I think it tells something that many of our colleagues disagree with, apparently, and that is that we have nothing to fear from prayer at the seat of Government, the very seat of Government, and we have much to learn and much that can inspire us.

NO, THE SOVIET MILITARY IS NOT 10 FEET TALL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the most widely accepted assumption about our national security is that the Soviet Union has conventional military forces sharply superior to ours. An article in the December issue of Arms Control Today raises serious doubts about this assumption. First, does the Warsaw Pact spend more for its military than the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO]? If so, how much? In the most recent year for which data is available—1984—NATO spent $330 billion, compared to the Warsaw Pact's $294.8 billion. In an article in Arms Control Today, Peter Almquist, a staff member of the Institute for Defense Analyses, writes:

> Unless NATO expenditures are significantly less effective than those of the Warsaw Treaty Organization [WTO], which is not likely, it is not surprising that Pact planners are concerned.

So it appears that in fact, NATO spends more than 10 percent more than the Warsaw Pact. How can the pact be superior when the Soviet Union and its allies are inefficient and incompetent in every other area of competition from agriculture to scientific technology? Ah, but doesn't the pact have enormous manpower in combat divisions that could strike Western Europe in a sudden blitzkrieg attack on the central front in Europe? Almquist argues that, in fact, the Warsaw Pact does have a large number of combat divisions they can field. They have on paper 253 divisions. Of these, 173 divisions are stationed in European Russia or Eastern Europe. Of these divisions, 56 are at a high readiness level. Of those high readiness divisions, 33 could be brought to bear in a blitz attack on the European central front. And of those divisions, 21 are Soviet, 12 are non-Soviet. By contrast, counting troops within the two Germanys, NATO enjoys a premobilization manpower advantage of more than 50 percent on that critical border. Furthermore, the Warsaw Pact forces suffer a weakness that could be fatal in an attack on the West. As Almquist puts it,

> At best, the Soviets would have to persuade other members of the Pact to participate in an offensive which would risk the devastation of their homelands. At worst, Soviet troops might be necessary to control their "allies" or the various national troops might find themselves dealing with active opposition in their own countries. * * * (On the other hand) the basic adherence of the Western European publics and their governments to alliance goals is not in doubt.

Mr. President, much has been made of the alleged huge advantage the Soviet Union has in tanks in Europe. Some have claimed the Soviet Union has a 5-to-1 advantage. The Soviets claim they have rough parity.

The International Institute for Strategic Studies in London gives the Warsaw Pact an advantage of 2 or 3 to 1. What's the real story? The difference lies in the aged condition of the tanks on both sides. Of the Warsaw Pact's 53,000 tanks, 33,000, or about 60 percent were designed in the 1940's and 1950's and entered into service before 1973. About 20 percent more entered into service before 1975 and were designed in the 1960's. Some of these tanks are even of World War II vintage. On the other hand, NATO actually enjoys a 3,000 tank advantage over the Warsaw Pact in tanks deployed since 1980. Also, most Soviet tanks are kept in storage and only deployed in major exercises. They are carefully watched by our intelligence. If they came out of storage and engaged in major exercises without notification during an East-West crisis, the West would quickly be on notice. NATO's antitank weapons are formidable. A recent Soviet Tactics textbook comments:

> Combat with the enemy's antitank means is acquiring decisive significance in the success of combined arms combat.

In control of the air, the pact is considered superior in numbers. But NATO has the advantage in manpower, in training, and in the quality of equipment. The defeat of Soviet planes by U.S. aircraft often in large numbers in the Middle East reflects these NATO advantages.

Almquist concludes:

> Overall, most observers consider it unlikely that the Warsaw Pact could achieve air superiority over NATO forces in the early stages of a conflict.

Mr. President, there is a common platitude in military lore that a wise military commander always reasons from a worst case scenario. He assumes that the adversary will make no mistakes, that the adversary's equipment will work perfectly, that his own forces will make blunders. This is specially true for wise military chiefs appearing before committees of the Congress, asking for appropriations from a Congress that is beleaguered by a huge budget deficit and conscious of intensive criticism of waste in military spending. The one sure way our Defense officials can appeal to the Congress for a bigger and bigger military budget is to make our prime adversary—the Soviet Union—10 feet tall. So we certainly pay full attention to the military strengths of the Warsaw Pact. But, if we are going to meet this problem honestly and effectively, we should also be fully aware of the adversary's weaknesses. This speech is intended to provide for that balance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred by Peter Almquist in the December 1987 issue of Arms Control Today be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOSCOW'S CONVENTIONAL WISDOM: SOVIET VIEWS OF THE EUROPEAN BALANCE

(Peter Almquist)

With the announcement in September that the United States and the Soviet Union would sign an agreement limiting intermediate-range nuclear forces, attention has again focused on the conventional balance of forces in Europe. Because nuclear weapons were deployed by NATO in part as a substitute for conventional weapons ("more bang for the buck"), their removal might seem to require a conventional buildup. Such a buildup could appear necessary because it is widely believed in the West that the Warsaw Pact enjoys conventional superiority in Europe. As retired U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger has stated, "Given current Warsaw Pact force levels massive reductions of Soviet offensive ground forces in Eastern Europe must be made just to create a balance between Pact and NATO forces."

But the Soviets are not nearly so sanguine about their conventional superiority. According to one Soviet source, Warsaw Pact data indicates that NATO enjoys a 20 percent advantage in "battle-ready divisions" and tactical aircraft, while the Warsaw Pact has "a slight advantage in armor."[1] New NATO strategic thinking and technologies are (at least in the open literature) seen by the Pact as putting into operation an aggressive strategy of "direct confrontation." As we see it, "wrote one Soviet source," the entire Central European [theater] (mainly FRG territory) has been turned into a bridgehead for attacking the countries of the socialist community using a deployed and combat-ready grouping fully supplied with the most modern combat equipment."[2] According to the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, NATO has slightly outspent the Warsaw Pact over the last decade. According to Western estimating techniques, in the most recent year for which data is available (1984), NATO spent $330 billion, compared to the Warsaw Pact's $294.8 billion. Unless NATO expenditures are significantly less effective than those of the Warsaw Treaty Organization (WTO), which is not likely, it is not surprising that Pact planners are concerned.

MILITARY THOUGHT

While in the 1960s most Soviet military writers argued that the conventional phase of a war involving the nuclear powers would be short, with escalation a virtual certainty, by the mid-1970s they had concluded that a war could be nuclear or conventional, and that a conventional phase of a war could last for days or weeks. As the conventional phase became increasingly important, Soviet authors argued that the beginning period of a war could prove decisive. This new pressure mean that the transition from peace (or, more likely, crisis) to war would have to be managed as quickly and as effectively as possible. This does not mean that the Soviets have adopted a strictly defensive position. The Soviets traditionally argue that they have a defensive doctrine and an offensive strategy; that is, they say that they will not initiate a war, but that in waging war, they will strike aggressively and deeply into enemy territory. Clearly, forces optimized for an offensive strategy can be interpreted as an offensive threat.

The possibility that a war's conventional phase could be decisive led to a renewed Soviet interest in, and planning for, large-scale conventional warfare. During World War II, the highest Soviet strategic formation was the front, comprising four to six armies in the first echelon, with a width of 200-300 kilometers and a depth of 300-400 kilometers. Its goal was to reach an objective 100-150 kilometers into the enemy's territory in seven to 10 days.

However, fronts were not always sufficient to achieve "large-scale political-military objectives," and groups of fronts (each called a "direction" or "axis") were established. These were to be "unified by a common concept and under the unified control of the Supreme High Command."

Contemporary Soviet military planners divide Europe into two or three "threaters of military action," or TVDs, each containing a number of "strategic directions" for striking into the depths of NATO countries. The TVD commander-in-chief commands several fronts, with each front typically comprising four or five armies. For example, the Western TVD (headed by former chief of the General Staff N.V. Ogarkov) includes the Group of Soviet Forces in Germany (GSFG). The GSFG, in turn, is made up of 19 divisions organized into five armies.

These divisions are typically well equipped with up-to-date Soviet equipment (for example, the T-80 tank, 2S5 152mm gun, SS-21 tactical missile, the SA-13 air defense missile, and the MiG-29 fighter). At the same time that the TVDs were being established, the Soviet air forces were being restructured, with more tactical aircraft (for air assault and air defense) being turned over to the various military districts and TVD commands. This was done apparently to improve the coordination between tactical air, air defense, and ground forces.

In the late 1970s and 1980s, it also became apparent that the Soviet military was again interested in the potential of deep operations and "operational maneuver groups" (OMGs), units of division and larger size designed to exploit breakthroughs, penetrate deep into enemy territory, and operate with relative independence.

CHANGING TECHNOLOGY

Soviet military thinking is not all that has changed, however. Soviet procurement patterns, forces, and deployments reflect the growing interest in the early conventional phase. The commander of the Western TVD, Nikolai Ogarkov, has been especially assertive in advocating the increased development of long-range, highly accurate munitions, arguing that additional nuclear weapons will do little to enhance either side's military capabilities. It would not be surprising to find that those who agree with Ogarkov see an INF agreement as a means of freeing some resources (albeit limited) for redirection to conventional improvements.

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

NATO thinking has evolved in a similar manner. The United States in particular has advocated an emphasis on "emerging technologies" in conventional forces. These new weapons, relying on advanced sensing, target acquisition and processing, and kill technologies, would be used to counter forces on the front and to strike deep into Warsaw Pact territory against Pact second echelon forces, airfields, and support. The Soviets refer to many of these weapons—unmanned forces able to seek out and destroy their targets—as "Reconnaissance-Strike Systems." Such weapons include the various antitank weapons under the "Assault Breaker" program or the U.S. Joint Surveillance and Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS), designed to destroy Warsaw Pack air-defense radars and systems.

The United States has been in the lead among NATO nations in developing the emphasis on striking deeper into Warsaw Pact forces to varying depths. The "AirLand Battle" doctrine provides for striking deep into Warsaw Pact territory in the event of a WTO attack. "Follow-On Forces Attack," which has been adopted by NATO as a long-term goal, calls for using conventionally armed missiles, aircraft, and artillery to strike at the second echelon of enemy forces, to a depth of 100–150 kilometers behind NATO's forward line of troops. Just as NATO is concerned about the offensive capability of the Soviet OMGs, Soviet authors are concerned about the offensive nature of both AirLand Battle and Follow-On-Forces Attack, arguing they are part of a NATO offensive strategy.

The Soviets see the development of conventional weapons with the potential impact on the battlefield equivalent to that of nuclear weapons as a possible new "revolution in military affairs." This is clearly one of their main concerns about the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative: whether SDI works or not, it will mean funding, research and development in areas of the greatest Soviet weakness and which could have significant impact on the conventional land battle.

THE "CORRELATION OF FORCES"

In Soviet eyes, there are few real reasons to be extremely confident in Europe. A Soviet military planner preparing a strike against Western Europe would be hard-pressed to claim a decisive advantage in many areas. In assessing military capabilities, the Soviets place considerable emphasis on various measures of the military balance or, as they frequently refer to it, the "correlation of forces." Relying on historical and contemporary analyses, the General Staff has developed several guidelines that they consider critical in gaining the advantage in a military engagement. For example, Soviet sources suggest an advantage in artillery of 3–5:1 is needed at the breakthrough point of the main sector, 3–4:1 in tanks and self-propelled artillery, 3–4:1 in motorized rifle (mechanical infantry) battalions, and 2:1 in aircraft. Such a breakthrough sector for a front (responsible for a zone 300–400 kilometers wide) would be from 20 to 50 kilometers wide.[3]

The Soviet General Staff, however, may not have adopted a uniform line on this issue: other Soviet and Western analysts suggest that the Soviet perception of desirable force ratios for an offensive breakthrough are considerably higher than those just quoted. In one discussion of NATO conventional capabilities, a Soviet author suggested that a 6:1 advantage in "forces and facilities along narrow breakthrough sectors is seen as a decisive condition of success in an offensive" and that NATO is striving to achieve this advantage.[4] These correlations (whether to NATO or WTO advantage) need not reflect the physical presence of the equipment, but the ability to bring their firepower to bear on a particular sector through, for example, redirection of artillery fire.

These correlations refer to the areas in which the Warsaw Pact forces would be striving to break through NATO lines, that is, areas that the Soviets felt were especially vulnerable or especially valuable. Even a relatively small opening might be exploitable by an OMG. Other forces along a front would be engaged in efforts to hold down NATO forces, preventing their use to reinforce jeopardized sectors.

It should be emphasized that these correlations are not treated by the Soviets as rigid conditions necessary for war or victory, but as desirable advantages. A positive correlation can be squandered through poor planning or command, and victory can at times be achieved with an unfavorable correlation. There are regular discussions of how to measure the correlation to account for varying differences in force mixes and how best to incorporate the qualitative differences that a simple numerical count might obscure. Ultimately, the correlations indicated may only serve as a guide for force structuring in peacetime and only indicate an opportunity in the event of war.

NATO AND PACT FORCES

The heart of Soviet armed forces in Europe is the Group of Soviet Forces in Germany, comprising five armies (19 divisions) and some 420,000 men. (The regular armed forces of the GSFG's East German host total only 179,000). Each of these divisions is a Category I division; that is, it is maintained with 70–100 percent of its manpower and 100 percent of its equipment. However, one-fourth of the men in the GSFG are new recruits, cycled into the GSFG as 100,000 more experienced soldiers, whose two-year term of service has been completed, are returned to the Soviet Union. As one Western analyst noted, this rotation is like replacing six trained divisions with six untrained ones twice each year.

NATO enjoys a pre-mobilization manpower advantage of more than 50 percent on this crucial border (counting only troops within the two Germanies). Further, in the event of a WTO offensive, NATO forces would be fighting on what has become, in effect, "home turf." Much of the Western analysis of the NATO-WTO balance includes those forces deployed in three western military districts of the Soviet Union, several hundred kilometers from the inter-German border. Of these, only a small fraction (probably four of 35 divisions) are Category I, while the others would have to be brought up to readiness. Frequently missed is the potential for mobilizing trained reservists in the Federal Republic and the other NATO European countries. Mobilization would increase the West German armed forces manpower from half a million to 1.3 million in 72 hours.

Much has also been made of Soviet tank superiority in Europe and, indeed, the Soviets place great value on tank forces. But the Soviets claim "rough parity" in tanks in Europe, counting French and Spanish tanks and tanks in storage in Western Europe, though no reputable Western source agrees with this estimate. The International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS) in London gives a WTO advantage of 2.3:1, although this includes forces in several western Soviet military districts.

NATO maintains more than 10,000 tanks in the Federal Republic of Germany alone, with another 3,700 in Britain, France, The Benelux countries, and Denmark. While IISS estimates the Soviet tank inventory at 53,000, only about 6,000–7,000 of these are deployed in East Germany. In addition, the East German armed forces have from 1,500 to 2,000 main battle tanks (and another 1,000 in storage). Soviet forces in Czechoslovakia have another 1,500 tanks and in Poland 700, with their national forces adding some 3,500 each.

It should also be noted that the Soviets are loath to dispose of potentially useful equipment, and of their 53,000 tanks, about two-thirds were designed and entered production before 1970. The Soviet inventory includes 19,900 T–54/–55s (designed in the late 1940s, produced 1948–1963); 13,000 T-62s (designed in the late 1950s, entered service 1961); 9,300 T–64s (designed in the 1960s and entered service by 1973); 8,500 T–72s (designed in the 1960s and entered service by 1975); and 1,400 of the newest T–80. Most tanks held by the Soviets' Warsaw Pact allies are T–54/–55s, designed in the 1940s and 1950s, and there are even some World War II vintage T–34s. In terms of the newest tanks, NATO actually enjoys a 3,000-tank advantage over the WTO in tanks deployed since 1980.

In addition, most Soviet tanks are kept in storage, including those of the GSFG, and are used only in major exercises. Their deployment—indeed, the undertaking of a major exercise without notification during an East-West crisis—would provide a key indicator to the West and potentially undermine any possibility of surprise.

Perhaps as troubling for Soviet planners as NATO tank forces, however, are NATO's antitank weapons. Over the last several years, the Soviets have expressed increasing concern over NATO's mobile and frequently reusable antitank guided missiles (ATGMs) and guns, capable of striking tanks at various ranges: according to a recent Soviet tactics textbooks, "Combat with the enemy's antitank means is acquiring decisive significance in the success of combined arms combat."[5]

The United States alone has 1,000 recoilless antitank guns, 600 Hellfire antitank missile launchers, 6,000 TOW launchers, and 10,000 Dragon (non-reusable) launchers. The non-U.S. NATO allies have more than 3,700 Milan ATGMs, perhaps 1,000 TOW launchers, and Dragon and HOT launchers. While the number of launchers may seem relatively small, several hundred thousand antitank missiles, including more than 400,000 for the TOW alone, have been produced, and these can be deployed in vehicles, on the ground, or on helicopters. The mobility and firepower of the latter in particular (such as the AH-64A Apache and AH-1SCobra) are cause of concern to the Soviets, and may have influenced their development of both the Mi-28 Havoc and the (as yet unnumbered) Hokum helicopters. In addition, the main role of the more than 500 USAF A-10 aircraft is tank-killing.

NATO's tanks and antitank capabilities have become key targets of the Soviet Mi-24 Hind and Mi-8 Hip helicopter force. But the Soviets have had first-hand experience with the vulnerability of such helicopter forces in Afghanistan, as rebels armed with U.S.-supplied Stinger antiaircraft weapons have destroyed several. Potentially more threatening to NATO's antitank forces is the apparent deployment of reactive armor on some Soviet tanks in East Germany. Reactive armor, carried on the outside of a tank's armor, explodes outward if struck by an antitank missile, blunting the missile's ability to penetrate the tank. Reactive armor raises serious questions about NATO ability to destroy WTO tanks, but it is not a blank check for the Soviets. In particular, reactive armor is vulnerable to antitank weapons which rely on penetrating rods and perhaps to antitank missiles launched from above (such as by helicopter).

A potentially critical factor in any campaign in Europe will be control of the air and the associated ability to strike deeply into the enemy's rear. The Pact forces maintain some 2,000 counterair and 1,100 ground attack aircraft in Eastern Europe, with about 72 main operating bases situated within 800 kilometers of the inter-German border. In recent years, Soviet frontal aviation has acquired the ability to conduct deep conventional air operations.

NATO air forces are generally considered superior to those of the Pact in the key areas of manpower, training, and equipment, while the Pact is usually given the edge in numbers, both of aircraft and air defense materiel. However, analyses beyond simple "bean-counting" indicate that there are a number of factors having significant impact on the Pact's ability to generate and use its aircraft effectively (for example, readiness, maintenance, pilot training, and tactics).

In addition, the experiences of the Middle East wars have demonstrated that Soviet-supplied equipment can be defeated (sometimes in devastating numbers) through exactly those NATO advantages: superior tactics, flying, and equipment. The development of U.S. stealth technologies—for example the F-19 advanced technology fighter—may soon pose an even more severe threat to Warsaw Pact air and ground forces.

The WTO air forces can be expected to be vulnerable through attacks on ground control stations as much as through attacks on the aircraft themselves. Whether on land, sea, or in the air, the Soviet have a strong proclivity towards centralized control. This is reflected in the air forces by the reliance on tight ground-control of aircraft. A related problem that the Soviets have been concerned about in the past is the difficulty of differentiating between friend and foe. The Pact (and perhaps NATO as well, given the complexity of the problem) can be expected to be responsible for damaging some of its own air forces. Overall, most observers consider it unlikely that the Warsaw Pact could achieve air superiority over NATO forces in the early stages of a conflict.

MOBILIZATION

The Soviets recognize that mobilization is a key indicator of intentions, bordering on a declaration of war itself. The chief of the General Staff's Military Science Directorate has cautioned that "Mobilization, to say nothing of all the complex steps for strategic deployment, has always been considered tantamount to a state of war, and returning to a peaceful position is very difficult to accomplish." [6] WTO divisions are maintained at three levels of readiness. Category I can be brought to full strength in 24 hours. While only a portion of Soviet divisions are Category I, this category includes all 30 Soviet divisions stationed in Eastern Europe. Category II divisions are, it is believed, maintained at 50-75 percent strength, with full manning to take three days and possible deployment in 30 days. They have all their combat equipment, but would draw on civilian equipment for logistical support. Category III divisions are maintained at cadre strength (i.e., perhaps 10-20 percent manning), with incomplete combat equipment, typically older models. These divisions are planned to be fully manned in eight to nine weeks and deployable after 90-120 days. Only about one-fourth of the Soviet divisions are Category I, and about half are Category III. The reliance on reservists, most of whom do not know, and have never trained with, their assigned divisions, has been characterized by the U.S. Department of Defense as "probably the most significant weakness of the Soviet reserve and mobilization system . . ." Clearly, mobilization will play a crucial role in any Warsaw Pact operation.

Mobilizing for the invasion of Afghanistan took six months, according to one report. The mobilization for the invasion of Czechoslovakia took the same length of time. The apparent intention to intervene militarily in Poland in late 1980 was reportedly abandoned in part because of numerous problems mobilizing the forces in the neighboring Soviet military districts. The Soviets walk a tightrope in their planning, striving to balance surprise and mobilization. One way around this dilemma for the Soviets is to use exercises as a cover for interventions, as has been done in the past. There are, however, other indicators by which observers can distinguish a true mobilization from an exercise.

For example, indications of an imminent Polish invasion in 1980 included preparations in airfields, depots, and hospitals, and sealing off parts of the Soviet-Polish border. In addition, under the September 1986 agreement of the conference on Disarmament in Europe (CDE), the Warsaw Pact and NATO have agreed to notify each other in advance of exercises involving more than 25,000 troops, to allow observers from the other side at such exercises, and to allow short-notice challenge inspections in certain cases. These confidence-building measures make it far less feasible for either alliance to use maneuvers as a cover for a mobilization. Soviet generals must also assume that NATO would respond to a WTO mobilization with military preparations of its own, denying the Pact a one-sided advantage.

RELIABILITY OF ALLIES

In the event of a WTO attack, the Soviets would, at best, have to persuade the other members of the Pact to participate in an offensive which risk the devastation of their homelands. At worst Soviet troops might be necessary to control their "allies," or the various national troops might find themselves dealing with active opposition in their own countries. More importantly, a Warsaw Treaty Organization offensive relies very heavily on non-Soviet forces during the first 90 days after mobilization, with the contribution of the non-Soviet Warsaw Pact countries ranging from one-third to more than one-half the mobilized divisions. And there have been signs of truculence on the part of several governments of the WTO since the deployment of new soviet intermediate- and short-range nuclear-capable weapons in response to the U.S. stationing of Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles (GLCMs). Despite significant problems in the NATO alliance (the ongoing French refusal to participate in a unified military command, the Greek-Turkish conflict), the basic adherence of the Western European publics and governments to alliance goals is not in doubt. This cannot be said with confidence of the Warsaw Pact. Any relistic Soviet assessment of the conventional balance in Europe must factor in this essential difference between the two alliances.

LOGISTICS

A final problem that the Soviet planner undoubtedly must consider is logistics. The Soviets believe in what can be called "command-push" logistics: supplies are given first to the units which are being most successful in achieving their objectives. At the same time, they have dedicated troops to maintaining railroads and pipelines for supply purposes, part of the tyl' (read) under a deputy minister of defense. Soviet divisions on the offensive would consume an estimated 1,000 tons per day of stores and carry only a three- to six-day supply of necessary materiel, with an army having another one or two days' supply. Soviet stockpiles in East Germany, exclusive of those with units, reportedly allow for 37 days of ammunition and 16 days of petroleum, oil, and lubricants.[7]

While the Soviets have invested heavily in supply and logistics, the task is certainly not as easy as simply geographic proximity might suggest. Soviet trains are of a different gauge than those found in Poland, for example, and thus critical supplies would have to be unloaded and reloaded at a few key transfer points near the border. The pipelines and rail lines that the Soviets would need to resupply a WTO drive would be vulnerable and critical targets for interdiction strikes (especially as their forces attempt to advance), and the Soviet capability for airlift, independent of the vulnerability of the airfields themselves, is limited. Of course, NATO logistical problems would also be considerable, especially given that a protracted conflict might well require resupply across the Atlantic Ocean, exposing ships to the hazards of submarine warfare.

CONCLUSIONS

Prudent military analysis is too frequently interpreted to mean recognizing only the enemy's strengths and one's own weaknesses: worst-case analysis. While it is equally foolish to overemphasize an adversary's weaknesses, a balanced approach would allow for the problems faced by the Warsaw Pact as well as those NATO might face. The view from Moscow is hardly the picture of a massive Soviet-bloc advantage, as suggested by Western officials over the last several years. In the event of a war, the Soviets would strive for surprise and speed moving westward.

At the same time, they face an adversary which, in general, is technically more advanced, which spends more on military manpower and equipment, and which would have the natural advantages of the defender. Moreover, the military activities of the Warsaw Pact are watched very carefully, and preparations for war would be difficult or impossible to hide. A surprise Warsaw Pact assault from a standing start would be extraordinarily risky, while the mobilization of forces, even under the guise of an exercise, risks both telegraphing Pact intentions and escalating an already tense situation.

Both WTO and NATO observers are aware of the Pact's strengths. Unfortunately, the West pays insufficient attention to the Pact's weaknesses.

The U.S. government is apparently planning to release a translation of these important notes in the near future. Other Soviet figures for the correlation have been substantially greater. Examples based on World War Two typically suggest desired correlations of 6-10:1 in artillery, 4-5:1 in tanks, and 3-5:1 in infantry. See V.G. Reznichenko, ed., Taktika (Tactics), (Moscow: Voyenizdat, 1984), p. 95. The U.S. Army has suggested that the Soviets seek even higher ratios of 5-10:1 in battalions, 4-10:1 in tanks, and 6-12:1 in artillery.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I yield the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I join in the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin regarding the mutual force reduction treaty and the statement that the Senator from Wisconsin made earlier this morning with regard to the balance of force in the central portion of Europe. It is a qualitative balance and I think it is very important that we point out these facts.

This Senator hopes to join the Senator from Wisconsin and others during the course of the early part of January in pointing out the actual abilities of the NATO forces to resist pact authority attack.

I thank the President, and I yield the floor.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be permitted to meet while the Senate is in session during the 2d session of the 100th Congress for the purpose of taking testimony and considering the Treaty on Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces for as long as the treaty is pending before the committee.

I also ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services and the Select Committee on Intelligence be permitted to meet while the Senate is in session during the 2d session of the 100th Congress on the same basis as that of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I just wanted to thank the majority leader, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, for his persistence. It paid off. Senator HELMS has indicated this morning through staff that he was able to contact all but one person with an objection. He would take the responsibility for that. And I want to thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. I think this will expedite the process of the hearings and maybe get the treaties to the floor a bit earlier. But I thank the majority leader for entering the request and the distinguished chairman, Senator PELL.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Republican leader for the efforts to which he has been put in making this arrangement. It has taken some considerable doing on his part.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I also would very much indeed like to thank the minority leader for the effort he made in this regard and to thank in absentia the Senator from North Carolina, Mr. HELMS, for his willingness to sign off on this. I am most appreciative and it would be appreciated by Senators on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I also thank Mr. HELMS. I know that this request reflects considerable cooperation on the part of several Senators, and Senator HELMS was able to help to achieve and secure that cooperation.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for making the request.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, while the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is here, I have an abiding interest in the ratification of the INF Treaty and I would like to inquire of him. I have heard this unanimous-consent agreement that has been entered and I did not object to it. I think it is a very good arrangement. I wonder if the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee would tell us in view of this agreement on what day the hearings will start before the Foreign Relations Committee on the INF Treaty?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alaska for his inquiry.

Originally it was our intention to start on January 19, Tuesday, following the Martin Luther King holiday. But in view of the unanimous-consent agreement we have received whereby the committee can both hear witnesses and consider the INF Treaty, it is my intention that we should come back on Monday, January 25, because we would have ample time then to meet each day right through the day when necessary.

Mr. STEVENS. Then the hearings will start on Monday, January 25?

Mr. PELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. And it is my understanding then that the other committees will commence later than that. Is the Senator informed on that?

Mr. PELL. I am not informed, but I know we are in touch with Senator NUNN. I told him I would let him know when we started. He wants to start about the same time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, that is what my inquiry is about. I am one who believes that the action of the Senate on this treaty will have a great deal to do with the progress of negotiations on the second group of issues before our negotiators at Geneva. The strategic arms reduction talks and the START talks ought to go forward as rapidly as possible. I believe this is a good time, and I would have preferred to have them sooner, but I understand the problem which the chairman has encountered. So I do appreciate his stating he will start the hearing on the first day that the Senate is back in session. That is my understanding.

Mr. PELL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator very much.

RECESS FOR 30 MINUTES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess awaiting the call of—Mr. President, to make it a little more convenient for those who have to sit at the desk, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for 30 minutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:19 p.m., recessed until 12:49 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. BURDICK].

JOHN NORTON'S CHRISTMAS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, recently I spoke of the book Holiday Tales, Christmas in the Adirondacks, by William Henry Harrison Murray. His book was published just before the turn of the century, and I quoted on that occasion the epilogue to "John Norton's Vagabond." Today I want to speak of "John Norton's Christmas" as we near the happy holidays and as we will have the time to reflect upon the true meaning of Christmas.

The poet has said the world is too much with us. Perhaps it could also be said that Christmas is too much with us—in the commercial sense. A reading of "John Norton's Christmas" will fill us with the true spirit of Christmas, the spirit of giving, the spirit of thinking of others, those who are in need, the selfless spirit, the recollections that go back to the angels and the wise men and the star in the east and the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes.

Murray told of John Norton, the trapper, an old man who lived in a cabin, and so the scene opens with the cabin in the snow, a huge fire in the large fireplace, with two hound dogs, one sitting on each side of the hearthstone and looking placidly into the fire; John Norton with his gray hair, sitting at the table, looking at a well-worn book, with wooden covers, the pages yellowed with age, talking to himself as he read the scriptures. His reading was labored, as would be the reading of an unlearned man. And he read from the scriptures which said at that point: "Give to him that lacketh, and from him that hath not, withhold not thine hand."

And then he turned the pages to those of the New Testament which spoke of the birth of Christ and the gathering of the angels and of the babe to which the wise men had come, having been guided by the star in the east. The thought struck John Norton, the old trapper, that, after all, he had been blessed, and that over the hill was the "dismal hut" of a woman whose husband had left her with two little girls and a little boy. Norton then spoke to the hounds, one on his right and one on his left, and said that God had been good, and that, in the spirit of the scriptures and of Christmas, this being Christmas Eve, they ought to think of going the next day over the hill to the dismal hut in which the poor woman with her children lived.

So he went around the cabin, filled a packsack with tea and maple sugar and honey, a bit of pork, some venison. He heard a knock at the door, and there was Wild Bill, the vagabond, who had brought with him a sled on which there was a box.

Norton welcomed Wild Bill into his humble cabin, and together they opened the box. The box was from Henry, the son of John Norton, who had gone away to the distant city to work. In the box was a set of pantaloons, a vest, some socks, and other useful gifts which had been sent to Wild Bill. Wild Bill was quite overcome by these gifts, and so he said, "I've never been given anything by anybody. These are the first gifts that I've ever received." And so he cried, and he made an oath that he would never drink again.

They then examined the box further. They lifted out a panel, beneath which was a woman's dress, some stockings, small dresses, a jackknife, a whistle, and some mittens. These were gifts that Henry had sent to the lonely woman and her children who lived across the mountain in the dismal hut. Together, John Norton and Wild Bill planned to go the next morning to give these useful items that had been supplied by John Norton's son Henry, and that had come from John Norton's own cabin, to give these to the poor woman and her children.

Meanwhile, the woman and her three children were sitting before the fireplace in their little hut. The fire had burned low. There was not much kindling left. There were holes in the roof. The little boy asked his mother if he could have a little more to eat, and she told him that there was not much left. One of the little girls asked her mother, "Mother, isn't this Christmas Eve?" And the mother said "Yes. Go to bed." Finally, she got her three little ones huddled into the bed and she prayed to God, the God of the starving: "Do not let my children die." She made up her mind that she would go the next morning down over the hill. She had seen some tracks that had been left in the snow by a huge buck.

She arose early and tiptoed out of the house after having taken the rifle from over the fireplace, and she started out to find this deer. After a little while, she saw him coming, 40 rods away. She waited, wondering whether he would go away, turn around, or come toward her. He came toward her. When he was about 10 rods away, she pulled the trigger—and missed the deer! She fainted and dropped the rifle in the snow.

Meanwhile, upon the hill the trapper and Wild Bill had heard the shot ring out. And here came the deer with strong, long bounds, leaping up the mountainside, and Old John Norton, the trapper, dropped to his knee, put his rifle up. One shot rang out, and the buck fell in the snow.

So John Norton and Wild Bill then took the deer to the dismal hut. This would be enough food for the woman and her three children to last for weeks. Norton opened the door and there huddled in the corner were the three little children like scared animals that had been run from their nest. John Norton and Wild Bill quieted the fears of the children, went out and got some wood, built a big fire, and to make a long story short, they prepared dinner, as we call it out in the country. Here in the Capitol, it would be called lunch.

They prepared this huge dinner—potatoes, parsnips, deer. They had deer fixed in several different ways. They were good chefs because we must remember that John Norton and Wild Bill lived out in that isolated area of the Adirondacks, an old trapper who did his own cooking and salted his own salmon, packed down his own pork and venison. So they had this huge fire going, and the pot boiling.

And the woman returned and opened the door to the cabin. And she wondered if these were angels who had come to her humble hut. They had fixed the roof. They cleaned out the deer, had it hanging out to dry, part of it cooking on the fireplace, and the tea was hot.

John Norton and Wild Bill gave to the woman the gifts that had been sent by Henry, and some of which had come from John Norton's own store of victuals in his humble cabin. So they made it a happy Christmas for this poor woman and her children. The little boy ran around and showed his new suit to his sisters at least 100 times. And the children skipped around and sang. Then in the afternoon late John Norton made his way back to his own little cabin.

One can imagine the feeling of satisfaction that must have been in John Norton's heart because he knew that he and Wild Bill had made this poor woman and her little children happy on Christmas day, that indeed he and Wild Bill had spent the day in the way that he believed Christmas day should best be spent—thinking of others, serving others, giving to others, sacrificing for others, those less fortunate than even he.

So here was this grizzled old rough trapper who was used to living out in the forest, living alone, his son had gone off to work, his wife had passed on. My, what a feeling that must have been in his heart! And what a joy that Christmas day must have been to that poor mother whose cupboard was bare, whose children were hungry and cold, whose cabin was almost without warmth. And how God had sent these angels, two hearty backwoodsmen, trappers, hunters, to the home when the ne'er-do-well husband, whose duty was to have been there, was elsewhere.

The final scene shows John Norton twining a wreath out of green branches. The two hounds are sitting by the fire. Then John twines a second wreath. As he twines these branches he looks from time to time at two pictures on the wall. One, the picture of Henry; the other the picture of his absent companion who had gone on before to her eternal reward. As he twined those wreaths he would look at those two reminders of the absent loved ones and he would say, "I miss them so."

The epilogue to John Norton's Christmas then was as follows:

Ah, friend, dear friend, when life's glad day with you and me is passed,
When the sweet Christmas chimes are rung
for other ears than ours,
When other hands set the green branches up, and other feet glide down the polished floor,

> May there be those still left behind to twine > us wreaths, and say, "We miss them > so!"

And this is the way John Norton the trapper kept his Christmas.

MISSION FULFILLED

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader and I have fulfilled our mission as given to us by the Chair. We called on the President of the United States and told him that the Senate had completed its business for the first session of the 100th Congress and was prepared to adjourn sine die. We inquired as to whether or not he had any further business that he wished to have us transact.

He informed us that he had just completed signing the continuing resolution and the reconciliation bill. He made some upbeat comments about the way we have been able to work out our differences toward the end of the session with regard to these two important bills making significant reductions in the budget deficit.

We indicated to him that we felt we had set a benchmark by way of cooperation on working together in a spirit of good will and that by doing this we had produced a difficult and complex legislation out of contentious moments.

We stated that, likewise, we looked forward to the next year and we were going to put in the President's Christmas stocking some goodies; for example, a new Supreme Court Justice; in all likelihood an INF Treaty. And we looked to the forthcoming year, wishing for the President and Mrs. Reagan a very pleasant and happy holiday season.

I yield to my Republican friend.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will just add that the President thanked the distinguished majority leader for his leadership. I believe he had to be particularly pleased with the Senate leadership, particularly the majority leader's leadership, because we did it on the Senate side. I have no quarrel with anyone else, but we tried to stick with the agreement. We made it. Our representatives were there. We did not know precisely everything they knew, but I think by and large the Senate performed very well.

The President appreciated that and said so in his statement. We are pleased that the President is pleased, and pleased he signed the two bills.

I think, as the distinguished majority leader said, there are a couple of good things coming up for the President: The Supreme Court nominee, Judge Kennedy, which looks like it is on track; the INF Treaty hearings, which will start January 25, and there is a lot of support for that treaty. So I think it is going to be a pretty good year.

I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Republican leader.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we also promised the President one final little goodie before we go out, and that is a bloc of nominations on the Executive Calendar, one being that of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Austria, Henry Anatole Grunwald.

Perrin, and that all other Department of State and Foreign Service officer nominations remain in status quo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(8) the Port Pacer II (Wisconsin Registration number 1747KC).

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am grateful to my two good friends, the leaders, for permitting us to call this matter up at this time. This has been a very vexatious thing for us. Each time the Congress has adjourned, we have put into place a moratorium on this reflagging issue and this time the House refused to do that. Instead, they have insisted on their date for the reflagging issue. While this bill is not totally acceptable to the Senate, and many of the members of the Commerce Committee are in disagreement with it, they have all agreed with me that we cannot leave this issue dangling, that we must act. As I indicated, I am grateful to everyone for understanding the situation. We will address the issue, again, however, Mr. President.

I move the Senate concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BICENTENNIAL MINUTE

DECEMBER 24, 1847: SENATOR JOHN FAIRFIELD DIES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senate, throughout its history has customarily found itself in session during the winter holiday season when Members would wish to be spending time with their loved ones. On December 24, 1847, 140 years ago this week, freshman Maine Senator John Fairfield, a man of exceptional promise, died suddenly. His unexpected death, as a consequence of a minor operation, was apparently due to the bungling or quackery of the surgeon.

Back in Maine, his family, to whom he was devoted, was unaware of this sad turn of events. On Christmas Eve, his wife and children eagerly awaited his arrival. Among the Senator's chief legacy to us today are the warm, almost daily letters he sent home to his family from the time he first arrived in Washington as a Representative in 1835. These letters, in their published form, contribute greatly to our knowledge of Washington life in the 1830's and 1840's. From them we learn that Fairfield experienced particular frustration at being separated from his family throughout the legislative year. After his struggles to find a reasonably priced boarding house in the capital, he wrote his wife, "I had no idea before being put to the trial how hard it would be for me to quit you and ours." He had barely arrived in Washington as a new Member when news reached him of the early birth of his third son, and he wrote his wife of his sorrow at not being by her side.

Fairfield was born in Maine in 1797. After attending Bowdoin College, he had embarked on a promising legal career. Twice elected to the House, he resigned in 1838 to become Governor of Maine. He resigned that position in 1843 to become a Senator. At the time of his death, the Maine Senator was being watched closely by the senior members of his party as a potential leader. Fairfield had written movingly of his colleagues who died in office, and he attended each funeral. Now it was his colleagues' turn to inform Mrs. Fairfield of her husband's untimely death in office at the age of 50.

THE CONTINUING RESOLUTION

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this bill appropriates over $600 billion to fund the operations of the Government. On a purely numerical accounting, it hardly makes sense to vote against this legislation on the basis of a $9 million appropriation. But that is what I intend to do.

That $9 million will go to fund the Contras. This money will not just be used for "humanitarian" or "nonlethal" aid. It will be used to transport the guns and ammunition which will be used to kill more innocent civilians. It will be used to support operations which threaten to undermine a fragile peace process in the region. It will be used to continue a policy which is morally bankrupt and legally suspect.

The President of the United States has indicated that he will veto any bill which does not contain funding for the Contras. His willingness to put the continued operation of the U.S. Government at risk in order to fund the Contras demonstrates his priorities and values. They are the same priorities and values which guided us when we mined the harbors in Nicaragua and led to the Iran-Contra affair. The only difference is that then the administration acted secretly and here it is operating openly. I didn't like it when this policy was implemented secretly and I don't like it—and cannot approve of it—when it is out in the open.

Some say that voting against this bill is just symbolism. I disagree. I believe that if we reject this continuing resolution we can adopt another one which funds needed programs while eliminating Contra funding. If I am wrong, and this is nothing more than a symbolic act, then I want to cast my vote for the symbols which have always guided this Nation: a desire for peace, a respect for law, and a recognition of the right of all people to determine their own destinies.

TAXATION OF COOPERATIVES' BUSINESS PROPERTY

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, it has come to my attention that a situation has developed which has caused great concern to farm cooperatives; namely, the tax treatment of business assets used in their operations. The cooperatives' concerns relates to how the gains and losses from the operation and disposition of such assets should be treated. Simply stated, the issue is whether the income or loss is to be apportioned ratably on a patronage basis among the cooperatives' members and nonmembers, or whether the income or loss should be treated as incidental, or nonpatronage sourced, income considered not to be derived from the organization's business conducted with or for members and patrons.

It appears that the manner in which the income of cooperatives should be taxed, either to the cooperative or to its patron membership on a single tax basis, involves basic issues that were addresed when subchapter T was enacted in 1962. However, if uncertainty still remains as to how cooperatives' asset dispositions should be taxed I believe it is preferable that Congress should address these matters rather than leaving them for resolution by the administrative process.

Cooperatives operate conceptually as conduits respecting patronage operations on behalf of members, and the basic concepts which should govern cooperative taxation should complement and recognize this basic single tax characteristic. Recent decisions by the Internal Revenue Service appear to depart from this concept, and if not altered, could cause substantial hardship for many thousands of farmer-producer members and patrons who have recently encountered severe operating losses from which they have been and are now, struggling to recover.

I believe the most preferable course of action would be to resolve this business property treatment question this year. Although I would have been willing to offer amendatory language that would resolve this issue, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator BENTSEN, advised me that the constraints on the budget process resulting from the Budget Summit precluded committee action this year. Therefore, I would appreciate if the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee would confirm my understanding that he is willing to review this question next year.

Mr. BENTSEN. I appreciate the efforts of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] in bringing this issue before the body, and I share his deep concern for the many farmers and ranchers, including a number in my home State of Texas, who are members of and are served by agricultural cooperatives. These agricultural coperatives have experienced the same severe financial strains that their members have suffered under, and I have no wish to see them unfairly burdened with tax controversies.

However, the choice is not mine to make. We were unable even to consider proposals such as this on this bill. The White House insisted that the revenue cap in the recent budget summit agreement be based on gross, not net, revenues. I opposed that, but the White House was insistent. As a result of that decision, it was extremely difficult to include provisions that do not raise revenue on this bill, however meritorious they may be. That approach eliminated any possiblity of including many other tax provisions of great importance to agriculture.

I will be glad to work with the Senator from Minnesota to see that this issue is brought before the Finance Committee next year. I appreciate his not having pressed this issue in consideration of the limitations within which we have been constrained to work to put together the revenue portion of this budget package.

THE TAX TITLE OF H.R. 3545, THE BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I have received a number of inquiries from my colleagues as to the proper interpretation of some of the tax provisions contained in the reconciliation act. I would like to address those questions.

First, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] has made an inquiry concerning the binding contract rule to the so-called mirror transaction provision of the bill. The conference adopted the Senate's transition rule to that provision. Senator BOREN has asked me to clarify the transition relief by confirming several points about the rule.

First, he has asked me to confirm that a binding contract exists when the boards of directors of both the acquiring and target corporations have approved the acquisition agreement prior to December 15 even though it is subject to subsequent shareholder approval. Second, he has asked me to confirm that, in these circumstances, the ultimate acquisition is to be considered as having been completed pursuant to such binding contract even though such binding contract was subject to normal commercial contingencies—such as financing, regulatory approval, due diligence, et cetera—and even if the final terms of the actual acquisition agreement vary from the binding contract as a result of such contingencies. Finally, Senator BOREN has asked me to confirm that the ultimate acquisition is also to be considered as having been completed pursuant to such binding contract even though subsequent to December 15, board approval or ratification is obtained due to changes to the terms resulting from such normal commercial contingencies.

I would like to assure Senator BOREN and other interested Senators that while other circumstances not described could also be covered, in the circumstances described, a contract would be considered fully binding for purposes of the mirror transaction provision in the bill.

MASTER LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS

I have also received several inquiries regarding the provision that would tax certain publicly traded partnerships as corporations. Under the conference agreement, a publicly traded partnership that does not derive 90 percent or more of its income from passive-type activities will be taxed as a corporation beginning after December 31, 1987. However, the conference agreement provides transition relief for existing publicly traded partnerships, and for other partnerships that have already taken steps to be created and that will be publicly traded. Under this transition relief, a partnership will continue to be taxed as a partnership until the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997, unless the partnership adds a substantial new line of business during that period.

I have been asked to clarify the meaning of the addition of a substantial new line of business. First, I would like to clarify that as long as the partnership is currently engaged in an activity, there is no requirement that the activity be specifically identified in the existing filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I would also like to clarify that under the conference agreement, if a partnership's existing line of business includes servicing mortgages that it or a related entity originates, and the partnership intends to expand these activities to include servicing mortgages originated by unrelated institutions, this would be considered the expansion of an existing line of business and not the addition of a substantial new line of business, even though its current SEC filings may not describe this expansion.

Finally, I would like to clarify the definition of passive type income. Under the conference agreement, income of a partnership from the purchase, transportation, storage, distribution, and retail and wholesale marketing of liquified petroleum gas—primarily propane—and other oil and gas products is passive-type income, even though such products are transported in trucks and rail cars that are owned or leased by the partnership and transported by third party pipelines with which the partnership contracts for transportation.

MORTGAGE REVENUE BOND

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I would like to address the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on a matter that is most urgent to moderate-income potential first-time homebuyers in many States. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 imposed a certain level of targeting on loans that could be made through the Mortgage Revenue Bond Program, and through the current refunding of outstanding mortgage revenue bonds. I am deeply concerned about the transition of current refunding bonds into compliance with the act.

I must point out that the technical corrections bill passed by the House of Representatives would in fact create a hardship on West Virginians as well as other Americans. In the technical corrections bill reported by the Finance Committee on October 16, 1987, a reasonable period for transition was provided. The new rules applied only to refunding bonds issued after October 16, 1987. This gave due notice to issuers and lenders on this issue, without penalizing those potential homebuyers whose loans were already in process.

Mr. Chairman, my concern is that the House version of the technical corrections legislation contains language which would require that any loan made after December 31, 1987, must comply with the new targeting limits. In view of this language, efforts are under way in my State to close those loans, so that the affected families would have made their home purchase by December 31, 1987. Yet, there may not be enough time to complete the paper work on each transaction to complete the purchase of the loan by the bond issuing agency. It is critical that the effective date for targeting apply when the homebuyer becomes a homeowner. I ask you to use your persuasive power with the House to insist upon the basic approach outlined in the Finance Committee version of the Technical Corrections Act.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Leader, we will fully consider the effective date issue as it relates to bonds issued to refund mortgage revenue bonds and the targeting of ensuing loans. I can assure you that I will continue to support the effective dates in the Finance Committee bill when technical corrections are considered next year. I also assure you that in considering the particular problem which you have raised, I will do all that I can to avoid inequitable results.

HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1987

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was delighted that the Congress adopted S. 825, the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987, late last night. I decried the failure of Congress to take action on this bill in a speech I delivered on the day before yesterday, December 20, 1987. While I doubt my words served as a major catalyst in moving this bill through the Congress; nevertheless, I was happy to see that this bill was passed, and am hopeful that it will be signed into law by the President.

For the last 7 years, the present administration has been opposed to the passage of a freestanding housing bill, and I believe the Nation's families have suffered as a result. During that time, we have seen the Federal budget increase by more than 60 percent, while the House portion of the Federal budget decreased by 70 percent. In 1980, housing programs accounted for 5.3 percent of the Federal budget. Today, they make up just 1.3 percent of the Federal budget. I believe that every citizen in this great country deserves adequate housing.

Owning one's own house is a significant part of the American dream. I think that this bill will help individuals throughout the Nation to fulfill this aspect of the American dream. The cuts of the past have not only been unacceptable; these cuts have been disastrous. However, I believe that this bill will help to make adequate housing a reality for millions of people across the Nation.

Again, Mr. President, I would like to express my hopes that this bill will finally be signed into law by the President of the United States in the next few days—thus immeasurably helping the people of America to realize their dreams—the dream of having a place to call home, the dream of owning that home, and the dream of adequate housing for all the people of this Nation.

Thank you, Mr. President.

PASSAGE OF THE IROQUOIS AMENDMENT

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to briefly explain the amendment I sponsored to the energy and water appropriations bill (H.R. 2700) regarding the consideration by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC] of the application made by the Iroquois Gas Transmission System [IGTS]. IGTS has applied to FERC for consideration of it's application under the new and untested optional expedited certificate [OEC] procedures which would ignore any consideration of need and alternative ways of supplying natural gas to the Northeast.

Much concern has been expressed by the use of the OEC procedures by FERC to consider such a large proposed pipeline with the potential for significant environmental impacts. With the full support of the Connecticut congressional delegation, I sponsored an amendment in the Senate to prevent FERC's use of the OEC procedures to consider the Iroquois application. I am pleased that the conference on the continuing resolution has maintained this amendment, with a modification.

The amendment, as approved by the conference, makes clear that no funds will be used for the consideration of the Iroquois application by FERC using it's OEC procedures until all environmental impact and considerations have been concluded. It is understood that an Environmental Impact Statement [EIS] will be prepared according to the National Environmental Policy Act [NEPA]. FERC is also required, and expected, in cooperation with other Federal agencies to observe the environmental requirements of the Clean Water Act, Rivers and Harbors Act, Endangered Species Act, Coastal Zone Management Act, and all other applicable environmental laws. Only after all environmental considerations have been fully and completely considered will FERC be allowed to use funds for further consideration of the Iroquois application.

Mr. President, with this process established in law and as explained here, it is my hope that the interests and concerns of Connecticut will be protected in the future supply of energy to the State and the Northeast.

A SALUTE TO RAY A. BARNHART

● Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I salute Ray A. Barnhart upon the occasion of his retirement as Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration. The State of Texas is justifiably proud of this dedicated public servant who retires December 31, 1987, after serving the Reagan administration since January 1981.

Though born in Illinois, Ray moved to Texas over 30 years ago to pursue the businesses of construction and insurance. He has adopted Texas as his home wholeheartedly, becoming city councilman, State legislator, member of the Texas Highway Commission and chairman of the Texas Republican Party. Ray has been a strong spokesman and supporter of President Reagan's philosophy—but he is a doer as well. During his years as Federal Highway Administrator he worked to return management prerogatives to the State level and instituted cost-saving procedures on the national level. Ray's role in the passage of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 ranks among his greatest achievements; the act raised much-needed highway revenues for the first time in over 20 years. Ray also worked hard pursuing initiatives to increase America's stature on the international technological scene where our leadership is now in strong demand.

During his tenure as administrator, he presided over an agency that employs 3,400 men and women in the 50 States, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia and has a budget of over $14 billion. Responsible not only for completing, repairing, and rehabilitating the Nation's Interstate and Primary Highway System, this agency also is involved in regulating many safety issues regarding the 5 million commercial vehicles on our Nation's highways.

I applaud Ray Barnhart, my friend and fellow Texan, as he leaves this post after 7 years of leadership for the Reagan administration and I wish him every success in future endeavors.●

HMONG REFUGEES IN OREGON

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on October 7 the Senate approved, by a margin of 63 to 33 votes, an amendment that seeks to improve the protection of refugees in Southeast Asia through improvements in camp security and living conditions, as well as through the promotion of appropriate durable solutions and an ongoing resettlement program. This amendment put the Senate on record in support of a continued humane and generous resettlement and protection program through the end of the decade. The vote demonstrates that the Senate has not succumbed to "compassion fatigue" in Southeast Asia.

The Atlantic Monthly's October feature article, "The Last Bus", expounds upon the precarious situation of one Southeast Asian refugee group, the Hmong. The Hmong face a range of difficult options because they cannot repatriate safety and the Thai refuse them permanent asylum.

Donald A. Ranard, who went to Ban Vinai, the major Hmong camp, states in his article, "Resettlement in the U.S. isn't the best solution—it's the least bad. And these days that's as good as it gets for the Hmong".

The Hmong have been reluctant to come to countries of third asylum, for both cultural and practical considerations. After 7 years of resettlement efforts, the Hmong are showing greater and greater signs of success. One of the reasons for this is the generous efforts of U.S. citizens who have helped the Hmong adjust to American culture and practices.

Recently in my own State, one Oregonian lost his life in a courageous attempt to save two Indochinese refugees. For the last 7 years of his life, Mike Raz had been a friend to the Indochinese community of Portland. He had given freely of his time and energies, and his love for his newfound friends led him to lay down his life for two of them who were drowning. It is because of the generosity and kindness of people like Mike Raz that the U.S. refugee policy in Southeast Asia is the tremendous humanitarian success that it is. The refugees in Ban Vinai and elsewhere owe a debt of gratitude to Mike, because if there were not American citizens willing to welcome incoming refugees, then the future of the U.S. refugee program would be bleak.

Mr. President, the fate of the Indochinese refugees resides with the decisions we make here in the United States. The real solution for the refugees is found in political and economic stability in their homelands in a manner which will allow them the chance to return there. But until that day comes, we must persist with efforts to continue to assist refugees in Southeast Asia. And thanks to loving people like Mike Raz and millions of others, we can be certain that this work will be done in a most American way.

Mr. President, following my statement, I would like to have inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD two articles pertaining to my remarks.

The articles follow:

LOST BETWEEN SEA AND RIVER, MAN REMAINS REFUGEES' FRIEND TO END—MARK RAZ HASN'T BEEN SEEN SINCE HE WENT TO THE AID OF A DROWNING CAMBODIAN

(By Michelle Stein)

For seven years Mark Raz of Portland had been a friend to the Indochinese community, helping refugees learn English, find jobs and work through income tax problems.

Saturday afternoon, Raz, 31, tried again to help. This time, a rescue effort would end his life.

Raz and a Hillsboro couple, Na and Nong Neou, are missing and presumed drowned at the mouth of the Columbia River. U.S. Coast Guard officials Tuesday said their bodies had not been found.

How they got into the river is a matter of speculation. Raz had gone fishing with two other Indochinese, who are friends, Saturday morning at Fort Canby State Park, on the Washington side. By noon Raz had reeled in a large perch and had hopes of hooking a few more.

Shortly afterward, a woman, frantically waving her arms, floated past Raz and his friends. Raz sent his friends for help and then attempted to rescue the woman, later identified as 29-year-old Nong Neou.

"Witnesses said Mark held onto a rock and tried to reach the woman's hand," said Marty Raz, who lived with his brother in Northeast Portland. "But a big wave came and washed Mark out to sea."

Fort Canby rangers tell a different story. Ranger Bruce Beyerl said officials believe Raz jumped "20 to 25 feet" from a "practically vertical cliff" into the pounding surf.

"The waves were 5 to 6 feet high," Beryl said. "They were really smashing the shore."

The woman's husband, 35-year-old Na Neou, was not seen in the water; but officials believe he also drowned. Relatives confirmed that the Neous had gone fishing together Saturday morning. Neither husband nor wife, both Cambodian refugees, has been seen since.

Hampered by dense fog, Coast Guard officials ended their search Sunday afternoon without recovering any bodies. Members of the Raz family, however, doubt that Mark Raz is coming home again.

"You don't know for sure when there's still a chance," said Bertha Raz, Mark's mother. "But chances are he's not alive. We just want them to recover a body."

That their son risked and probably lost his life to help another does not surprise the Razes. Mark Raz, a landscaper for the Oregon Parks and Recreation Division, was a "wonderful boy" who "loved helping others," his mother said.

"He memorized Sermon on the Mount," said Bertha Raz. "He tried to live by that standard."

Mark Raz was especially fond of helping those in the Indochinese community. Seven years ago he befriended refugees on a neighborhood basketball court, teaching them to play the game, remembers Mark's father, Paul Raz.

The refugees "didn't know a thing about basketball," said Paul Raz. "Mark played with them and then brought them home. He really cared about them."

Sokhom Tauch, at the Portland Refugee Center, said Tuesday that he didn't know Mark Raz but had heard from others of his generosity. As it happens, Tauch also was acquainted with the Neous.

"My friends tell me Mark Raz was the type of person who would help an elderly Indochinese person across the street," Tauch said. "He would run up to them and try to help."

THE LAST BUS

When Boonmee Vichitmala returned to Ban Vinai, a Hmong refugee camp in northeastern Thailand, from a tour of the United States, he brought back dozens of photographs he had taken in California, Minnesota, and Rhode Island, of Hmong refugees who had been successful in America. As the Thai camp commander of Ban Vinai, Boonmee was in charge of Thailand's largest refugee camp, containing the biggest Hmong community in the world. For several years he had grappled with a perplexing problem: what to do with more than 40,000 refugees who would rather stay in a refugee camp than go to the United States.

Boonmee's photographs showed Hmong refugees, in their elaborately embroidered tribal clothes, standing in front of their new houses and cars and in their remodeled living rooms and kitchens, packed with TVs, stereos, VCRs, ovens, dishwashers, and microwaves. He put the pictures on the outside wall of his office building, a bungalow in the middle of the camp, and when Hmong visitors came by, Boonmee would point to the pictures and describe the life that was awaiting them in America.

Boonmee's plan worked about as well as the quixotic scheme to reduce the Hmong birthrate in Ban Vinai by offering cassette recorders and other premiums to those who volunteered to participate in a birth-control program. For a long time after that, people could be seen grinding up birth-control pills to use in their gardens. The pills, it turns out, make an excellent fertilizer—a fillip of irony in the life of the Hmong. "The Hmong have lost the things that matter most to them: their homeland and their independence," a refugee worker in Ban Vinai commented to me on a recent visit I made. "All they have left is their stubbornness."

Refugee officials talk about the three "durable solutions" to refugee problems: voluntary repatriation, settlement in the country of first refuge, and resettlement in a third country. For the Hmong, who never seem to fit into conventional categories, circumstances have created the "non-durable non-solution," as one U.S. refugee official puts it, of a life in limbo in Ban Vinai.

According to the 1967 United Nations agreement on refugees, to which the United States (but not Thailand) is a signatory, repatriation is acceptable only when it's voluntary or when changed circumstances in the refugee's country of origin will permit a safe return. Neither condition applies. The Hmong say they don't want to go back to a Vietnamese-controlled Laos, and independent observers are unable to confirm or deny reports that some returned Hmong have been singled out for harsh treatment. Certainly the resistance complicates matters: even if the Hmong wanted to go back, the Lao government would be unlikely to accept large numbers of them from a camp with ties to the active resistance.

The second solution—settling the refugees permanently in Thailand—probably has no more chance for success than repatriation, even though Ban Vinai, with its village-like appearance, seems halfway there. Thailand has refused even to discuss the possibilty, and with reason. For one thing, a resettlement program in Thailand could attract thousands of new asylum-seekers from Laos, one of the poorest countries in the world. For another, hundreds of thousands of Indochinese refugees and displaced persons are still in Thailand twelve years after the end of the war, including perhaps 50,000 illegal immigrants from Laos. In addition, Thailand has a shifting population of hill-tribe refugees from Burma, 12,000 Chinese refugees (remnants of the defeated Chinese Kuomintang army), and 40,000 Vietnamese refugees from the first Indochina War, who thirty years later are still viewed suspiciously as a Vietnamese fifth column. Moreover, Thailand already has its own population of Hmong—50,000 of them—and for years has been trying without success to persuade them to come down from the mountains, where they grow opium, slashing and burning valuable forest in the process.

Still, the presence of 45,000 anti-Communist Hmong on the Thai-Lao border hasn't been without temporary advantage to Tahiland. An effective resistance might provoke an attack from Vietnamese-backed Laos and most certainly would precipitate a crackdown on Hmong-resistance sympathizers in Laos, which in turn could generate more refugees. But a minimally effective resistance keeps presssure on Laos. This gives Thailand a card to use in its efforts to negotiate better relations with Laos, which supports a small Communist Thai insurgency in northeastern Thailand. There is economic advantage as well: Ban Vinai is located in one of Thailand's poorest regions, and its markets are a source of income to local villagers, who can no longer depend on trade with Lao villagers across the Mekong.

For the Hmong and the United States, Ban Vinai has provided an alternative to resettlement in the United States—after the 1980 influx neither the Hmong nor the United States was eager to try that experiecne again—and time to wait for other options to open up. Most of all, Ban Vinai serves the interests of Hmong resistance leaders. Without Ban Vinai the resistance would fold, and without a resistance Hmong military leaders—both in Ban Vinai and in the United States—would lose their only source of power.

In 1983, suspecting that the non-durable non-solution was becoming, quietly and without notice, permanent, Thailand increased pressure on the Hmong to make a choice. It closed Ban Vinai to new arivals, who were sent instead to Chigang Kham, an austere barbed-wire camp that makes Ban Vinai look like a veritable country club. A year later Thailand stepped up the pressure by increasing efforts to prevent ayslum-seekers from entering the country. Also, from 1984 to 1985 some 3,000 undocumented residents—refugees who and sneaked into Ban Vinai to join relatives—were rounded up and sent to Chiang Kham. The post office, a vital link to relatives in the United States, was moved out of Ban Vinai, and a ban on the cutting of bamboo for construction was reissued, forcing the United Nations to use corrugated tin to build homes that became hotboxes in the intense heat.

Efforts to control the birthrate in Ban Vinai practice of early marriage, combined with Ban Vinai's large population of young women, has given the camp one of the highest birthrates in the world. For every Hmong who emigrated to the United States in 1986, another was born in the camp.

From 1984 to 1986 Alan Wright, a nurse in Ban Vinai, studied the birth, emigration, and death rates in the camp. In a paper he wrote in the summer of last year, Wright offered a best-case-worst-case scenario: at the rate of resettlement in the West occurring over that period, the camp's population would stay roughly the same, but if emigration stopped, the population would double in just seventeen years. Before he left Thailand, in 1986, Wright gave a copy of his report to a Thai refugee official. It was called "A Never-Ending Refugee Camp?"

The worst-case scenario—a doubling of the Hmong population in seventeen years—wasn't impossible. To Thai officials, the U.S. refugee program appeared to be winding down. In 1980, at the height of the refugee crisis in Southeast Asia, more than 90,000 refugees left Thailand for resettlement in the United States. As the crisis waned, so did international attention. In 1985 fewer than 24,000 refugees left Thailand for the United States; other countries took 7,400. But there were still plenty of refugees in Thailand at the end of that year—130,000, a slight increase over the previous year. (More than 250,000 Cambodian "displaced persons" were on the Thai-Cambodian border, with no option for resettlement in the West.)

In the summer of 1986. Thai officials announced that 1987 would be the last year that refugees would be resettled in the West. A letter threatening to close down Ban Vinai and send the refugees back to Laos was circulated in the camp. The threat came at a time when the Hmong were beginning to lose faith in the eleven-year-old resistance. It is said that when General Vang Pao, the charismatic Hmong leader, fled Laos for Thailand and then the United States, in 1975, he told one of his assistants that the Hmong would return to Laos within ten years. The Hmong believe in the power of prophecy, and when 1985 passed with no prospect of change in Laos, many began to question the resistance effort as a whole and Vang Pao's leadership in particular.

By mid-1986 refugee officials at the American Embassy in Bangkok had learned that 10,000 Hmong—a quarter of Ban Vinai's population—had put their names on a list of people interested in going to the United States. To be admitted to the United States, a refugee must meet two criteria: he must show that he fled his country out of a "well-founded fear of persecution," and he must be of "special humanitarian concern" to the United States. These criteria fit the Hmong. But did they want to come? In Bangkok, observers in the diplomatic community weren't convinced that there had been a dramatic change in attitude, despite the list of 10,000 names. The Hmong had a habit of going through all the stages of getting approved and then just staying put. One INS officer was openly skeptical. "I'll believe it when they get on the bus," he said.

I decided to go to Ban Vinai to see the situation there for myself.

To a first-time visitor Ban Vinai seems crowded and dirty. There is no running water or electricity in the huts. Children play in stagnant pools, and one is never far away from the stench of open sewers. Tetanus, typhoid, and tuberculosis take their toll on a people who traditionally believe that disease is caused by spirits and healed through complex rituals of exorcism. Yet in some ways conditions compare favorably with those in poor villages in Laos and Thailand: the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees provides food, shelter, and water. A hospital, run by a team of Dutch health workers, provides medical care. There are English and vocational-training classes for adults, and an elementary school for the children. Markets sell everything from fresh fish and fruit to cosmetics and Chinese herbal medicines. There's a barber shop, several restaurants, a blacksmith, and a church, where a French priest, wearing a Hmong-embroidered vestment, gives sermons in Lao on the Holy Spirit, offering an alternative to the spirits, malevolent and benign, that populate the Hmong universe. There are even outdoor photo studios where one can choose the Swiss alps or the Taj Mahal for a backdrop.

In the neighborhoods women sit for hours on tiny wooden stools in front of their thatched-roof huts or tin-roofed longhouses, sewing pan dau while they listen to tapes from relatives on Japanese cassette recorders. Occasionally there's the sound of a gong. Somewhere in the camp at shaman—a rattle in one hand, a finger bell in the other, and a black cloth covering his face—chants and dances, he is gone on a journey to the had intensified, and that Thai guards in Ban Vinai were extorting money from some of the undocumented residents—Hmong refugees who had sneaked into Ban Vinai to join relatives. Those who complained about the payments were threatened with repatriation.

On March 4 and 11 the refugee situation in Thailand was the focus of House subcommittee hearings. One of those who testified at the March 4 hearing was Roger Winter, the director of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, who had investigated pushbacks on the Thai-Laos border and had warned in a report almost a year earlier, "The threat of involuntary repatriations . . . appears to be increasing." Winter presented the committee with the names of 362 Hmong who had been turned away from Thailand and urged the United States to "intervene more vigorously" to stop the forced returns.

At the March 11 hearing a State Department refugee official couldn't confirm or deny Winter's information but said that "the United States is adamantly opposed to the involuntary return of anyone anywhere."

Four days later thirty-eight undocumented immigrants were rounded up in Ban Vinai and sent back to Laos. This wasn't an ordinary pushback, refugee advocates pointed out. It was the first time the Thais had repatriated Hmong from the sanctuary of a UN refugee camp. A State Department protest ("possibly the most serious instance of forced repatriation from Thailand since 1979") prompted an angry Thai response ("If the U.S. is so concerned with the human rights of 38 Hmong, it must be even more concerned about larger groups.") Another series of pushbacks brought the situation to the brink of crisis.

Noting that asylum in Thailand is contingent on the continued opportunity for resettlement in the West, refugee advocates called for a long-term commitment to solving the problem. On March 23 Senator Mark Hatfield, of Oregon, introduced a bill that would maintain for the next three years an Indochinese-refugee ceiling of 28,000—1,000 more than the anticipated 1988 ceiling. The bill also calls for increased efforts to protect refugees in Thailand, and earmarks 9,000 slots each year for the "long-stayers." The bill is unlikely to pass in its present form; many find fault with the inflexibility of a three-year admission number for specific groups of refugees. But the bill has served the temporary purpose of relieving pressure on refugees in Thailand—it has, in other words, gotten the Thai government's attention. A promise by Secretary of State George Shultz at a June conference of the ASEAN nations that the United States will "continue to resettle refugees in substantial numbers" has served the same purpose. Yet the potential for crisis remains. And while refugees in Ban Vinai don't appear to be in any immediate danger, most observers believe that the turning away of Hmong along the Thai-Lao border quietly continues.

Last spring a friend who works in Ban Vinai called me from Bangkok. Almost all the Hmong approved by the INS had gotten on the bus, he said.

What happens to the remaining 500,000 Hmong in Thailand—38,000 still in Ban Vinai and about 12,000 in Chiang Kham—largely depends on the United States. This fall refugee officials will present the Administration's 1988 proposal for U.S. refugee admissions to the House and Senate subcommittees on refugee affairs. The Administration is expected to propose an Indochinese-refugee ceiling of at least 27,000 (plus 8,500 Vietnamese leaving Vietnam directly through the Orderly Departure Program). Observers believe that the Administration is prepared to propose a tentative Hmong-admissions number close to this year's 8,900.

Although there is some congressional support for a moderately high Hmong ceiling, refugee advocates have been anticipating with some anxiety the consultations between the Administration and Congress. The consultations have been scheduled to take place shortly after the arrival in July, August, and September of more than 5,500 Hmong—over half the Hmong arrivals for fiscal year 1987—a situation that is sometimes referred to as the "Hmong bulge." The bulge could have been avoided if the processing of the 5,500 Hmong applications had been done earlier in the year, say refugee advocates, who worry that the arrival of so many Hmong in so short a time could create a backlash, particularly in the central valley.

Resettlement in the United States may not be a happy solution for the Hmong. But right now there are no other options: the Hmong don't want to go back to a Vietnamese-controlled Laos, and as long as there is a active resistance with ties to Ban Vinai, Laos probably won't take them. Permanent settlement of the Hmong in Thailand is such a sensitive issue with the Thais that even to bring it up at this point could jeopardize the safety of Hmong asylum-seekers as well as of those in Ban Vinai.

Resettlement in the United States isn't the best solution—it's the least bad. And these days that's as good as it gets for the Hmong.—Donald A. Ranard

AFRICAN FAMINE RECOVERY AND DEVELOPMENT FUND

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, for the RECORD, I simply want to commend the action yesterday of the Senate Appropriations Committee members, under the leadership of Senator KASTEN, in finally including language in the continuing resolution to establish a special fund for African famine recovery and development.

It was a concept that Senator KASTEN and I first raised in 1985, in the wake of that year's massive famine in the Horn of Africa and the Sahel. It was a concept long urged by the many voluntary and international agencies involved in African assistance, as well as officials of AID.

The concept was to deal differently with the special needs and problems of Africa, to give greater flexibility in the programming of our development efforts, and to promote both project development as well as economic and agricultural reforms.

The language adopted yesterday in the continuing resolution fully tracks the more extensive language in pending authorization bills, which I hope will be enacted in the second session of this Congress.

In the meantime, the Senate Appropriations Committee members have acted responsibly in both appropriating the full amount for Africa assistance, as well as in giving AID and the voluntary agencies new tools and greater flexibility for promoting development and agricultural reform in Africa. I commend Senator KASTEN for his leadership, and it has been a pleasure to work with him over these past 2 years to achieve this goal.●

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY PERTAINING TO STEVENS AMENDMENT NO. 1346 TO HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 395

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, on January 12, 1987, the Office of Legal Counsel of the Department of Justice, in a memorandum to the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, provided an opinion concerning the scope of the term "particular matter" under title 18 of the United States Code, section 208. The Justice Department memorandum broadly interprets the prohibition in that section of the Code to include matters of general policy, regulations, and legislation.

The Department of Justice interpretation prohibits Department of the Interior employees from participating in specific and general matters in which they, their spouses or children, their partners, or organizations in which they serve as officers, have a financial interest.

The effect of this interpretation is especially counterproductive since financial interests that are only remotely related to matters of general application can preclude an employee's involvement. Perhaps the most significant impact of this memorandum is on the operations of the Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA] and the Indian Health Service [IHS].

All Alaska Natives and a majority of Indians throughout the country who are hired under the preference laws to serve in the BIA and the IHS have, by birth right, a financial interest in their tribes. In addition, many Alaska Natives and Indians are members of organizations that have financial interests that could be affected by the matters before the BIA and the IHS.

The Justice memorandum will also impact individuals who are appointed to serve on advisory boards formed to ensure proper consideration of regulatory, legislative, and other general policy issues. These individuals may have or may represent entities that have financial interests in matters the boards will consider.

The Justice memorandum will also impact on the transfer of scientific and technological information between the Government and the private sector. Scientific experts of the U.S. Geological Survey, the U.S. Bureau of Mines, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service routinely serve as members of private professional societies and academic research boards. A significant number of these private-sector organizations have financial interests in matters before these bureaus of the Department of the Interior. Continuing these relationships enhances the Government's knowledge of and contribution to scientific development.

I offered an amendment, which the Senate and House conferees accepted, to deal with the counterproductive effect created by the Department of Justice interpretation regarding section 208 of title 18, United States Code. My amendment will not eliminate the prohibitions of title 18, United States Code, section 208 for Department of the Interior and Indian Health Service employees. Rather, it will apply the prohibition to "particular matters involving a specific party or parties" as is already the case in section 207 of title 18 of the United States Code, thereby eliminating application to general policy matters. My amendment will not allow employees to be involved in specific actions in which they have a direct financial interest.

This matter has the approval of the two departments involved. It covers all Department of the Interior and Indian Health Service employees.●

ERNEST A. LOTITO

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I was saddened to learn yesterday that Ernest A. Lotito, a friend of many years, had died suddenly at his home. I had known Ernie Lotito and his family since 1968. He was a man who loved his profession—journalism and publishing; and he will be greatly missed by all those who knew him and his remarkable achievements.

I first met Ernie when he was press secretary for Maryland Citizens for Humphrey-Muskie in 1968. He then worked on the staff of Senator Joseph D. Tydings for 2 years before joining Walter F. Mondale in his Senate office as his special assistant. At the beginning of the Carter administration, Ernie served as Director of Public Affairs at the U.S. Department of Commerce. He continued his long interest in the Democratic Party by serving recently on the Fairfax County Democratic Committee.

Ernie was extraordinarily proud of his Italian heritage. He was a director of the Italian-American Foundation and had studied in Italy at the University of Padua. One of his earliest reporting assignments was with the Rome bureau of United Press International, and he maintained a life-long interest in Italy and the history and accomplishments of Italian-Americans.

One of his great ambitions had been to publish his own newspapers, and in 1978 he purchased the Calvert Independent in Calvert County, MD. Since then he purchased other weekly newspapers in Prince George's County and southern Maryland. He took pride in the quality of his publications and the strong journalistic traditions they reflected.

Ernie Lotito's life was enriched by a wonderful family who shared his enthusiastic approach to everything he undertook. He had strongly held views on politics and the role of elected officials and was involved all his life in efforts to ensure that opportunities were open to all Americans. I am proud to have known him as a friend, and I join his family and friends in mourning this great loss.●

B. MELVIN COLE

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, yesterday brought the sad news of the death of one of Maryland's most distinguished and respected public servants, B. Melvin Cole, the administrative officer of Baltimore County. I join his family and friends in mourning his loss.

Mel Cole exemplified the qualities one looks for in a public official. He was experienced, knowledgeable, compassionate, and effective. Following a career of 42 years in public education where he rose from teaching in elementary school to become the associate superintendent of Baltimore County's public schools, he did not simply retire as many would have. He started a new career with the Baltimore County Government and became its chief operating officer.

Several weeks ago, the people of Baltimore County honored Mel Cole with a tribute dinner and the announcement that the Towson State University Foundation was establishing the B. Melvin Cole Endowment to honor his 50 years of exemplary public service. This endowment recognized that, although he spent most of his life working for the citizens of Baltimore County, his work was recognized throughout Maryland and beyond. He had been a vice president of the National Education Association and served as a consultant to the U.S. State Department on its schools abroad.

The editorial in today's Baltimore Sun reviews Mel Cole's worthy accomplishments, and I would like to share it with my colleagues in the Senate.

The editorial follows:

B. MELVIN COLE

Baltimore County will miss Melvin Cole. Not only was the county administrator well liked and respected. His death yesterday at 72 leaves the county without the vast knowledge of government details that he brought to his work.

He had been running the executive office as the county's highest appointed official for nine years, but his memory and experience stretched half a century into the political past. Mr. Cole provided leaders in Towson with a crucial sense of continuity. He helped define and carry out the policies of the two county executives he served—Donald P. Hutchinson for two terms and Dennis F. Rasmussen, who took office a year ago.

Mr. Cole came indirectly to government as an elementary school teacher right out of Towson State Normal School (now Towson State University). He left the school system 42 years later as associate superintendent. As an alert professional, he learned more about politics in the school system than in political science 101.

The advice he gave carried great weight in the upper echelons of government. County Executive Spiro Agnew remembered that when he became governor in 1967. He knew of Mr. Cole's informed views on public education and urged him to come to Annapolis with him. One of Mr. Cole's valuable assets was his ability to brief lawmakers—whether legislators or council members—in a dispassionate but convincing manner.

His primary duties as chief administrator involved the daily management of the county's 6,000 bureaucrats, a job he undertook with great care and seriousness. If any part of government operations broke down, one half-expected that the concerned Mel Cole would go out and fix it himself. It would have come as no surprise. His total involvement in county affairs was what made him so valuable.

One of Mr. Cole's legacies is that he leaves the county in good hands. Though he had no plans to retire, two deputies were named this month to help him cope with the growing burden of administering a subdivision of nearly 700,000 residents. Still, his firm, guiding presence will be missed. Like a proud father, Mel Cole watched over Baltimore County as it transformed itself from rural farmland into a major metropolitan suburb.●

CLEARINGHOUSE ON STATE AND LOCAL INITIATIVES

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I would like to thank the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice and State, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for his help in securing startup funding for the Clearinghouse on State and Local Initiatives.

As the chairman knows the Clearinghouse is authorized by the Senate and House versions of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act, which is now being considered in conference. The Senate Commerce Committee, of which the Senator also is the chairman, reported the Clearinghouse as section 202 of S. 907. S. 907 was then melded into the Senate version of the trade bill and it was adopted by the Senate, with the Clearinghouse appearing as section 4102 of the Senate amendment to H.R. 3.

Meanwhile the House Science and Technology Committee had reported legislation establishing the Clearinghouse as title IV of H.R. 2916.

Inasmuch as the Senate and House versions of the Clearinghouse are virtually identical, it is quite clear that when the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act becomes law—and I have no doubt that it will—the Clearinghouse will be fully authorized.

The Senate Appropriations Committee earmarked $500,000 in fiscal 1988 to fund the Clearinghouse in the appropriations bill for the Commerce Department. (Senate Report 100-182 at pages 6-7.) The Senate version of the continuing resolution also earmarked this amount for the Clearinghouse. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S 17944-45, December 11, 1987.)

In the conference on the continuing resolution it was felt that the Clearinghouse would not need full funding this first year for several reasons. First, we already are well into this fiscal year. Second, the Department of Commerce may well wait until the trade bill is approved before it begins to organize the Clearinghouse. And third, it will take some time for the Department to appoint the director for the Clearinghouse, to hire staff and to begin operations.

Given these factors, the conference has determined to give the Clearinghouse $250,000 for this fiscal year. This is enough to make sure that the Clearinghouse begins operations this year, which is what the Congress wants for this new office.

The conference report assumes that the Clearinghouse will be established this year, either before or after the trade bill is adopted. It assumes that a director will be appointed either before or immediately after the trade bill is adopted. It assumes that the Department will begin to hire staff for the Clearinghouse, begin to operate the Clearinghouse, set the initial research and outreach priorities for the Clearinghouse and get a running-start to have the Clearinghouse operating at full-speed during fiscal 1989.

I am delighted with this action of the conference and am most grateful for the assistance of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS].●

S. 825—HOUSING AUTHORIZATION BILL

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, Congress finally has passed a housing authorization bill. It's about time.

I first want to commend the Senator from California, chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, for his hard work on this legislation. I am not pleased with every provision of the bill, but it should provide a stable environment in which housing and community development programs can be effectively administered over the next 2 years.

The people of New Jersey need housing programs. Affordable housing is scarce in New Jersey, where land and development prices are skyrocketing. The urban poor, the young family, the elderly are all struggling to find decent housing at an affordable price.

New Jersey's cities also need this bill. They have endured the loss of revenue sharing and a steep reduction in State urban aid. They have been hit by cuts in the UDAG and CDBG programs. One by one, they have seen sources of Federal and State commitment shrink. New Jersey's mayors are faced with raising taxes to maintain vital services. Aging infrastructures also will require significant capital investment.

It has been far too long since Congress passed legislation to reauthorize our housing and community development programs. Communities have struggled to administer programs whose continuation has been subject to the uncertainties of continuing resolutions and supplemental appropriations bills. Long-term planning has been severely hampered.

This bill would authorize several housing and community development programs at current levels. These include important programs such as Community Development Block Grants [CDBG's], and Urban Development Action Grants [UDAG's]. New Jersey has received many benefits from these programs. In fiscal year 1987, the State received about $95 million through the CDBG program and about $10 million in UDAG grants. This has helped to revitalize our urban areas, increase the availability of housing, and strengthen the economies of several communities around the State.

The bill also includes a provision I introduced to help ensure that communities in New Jersey and elsewhere are treated fairly under the Urban Development, Action Grant Program. The UDAG statute bars the use of UDAG's to facilitate business relocation. There has been controversy over the application of this provision, especially in New Jesey where many businesses are relocating due to the many economic benefits offered by our State.

The amendment I, offered, which has been included in the conference committee's report, would give an applicant community 90-day notice of intent to withhold, deny or cancel assistance. During that time, the community would be able to appeal the decision to the Secretary. This will ensure that communities will not have to worry that an arbitrary and discriminatory decision may cost them a legitimate grant award.

Another provision in the bill I want to note would extend the entitlement status of certain metropolitan cities and urban counties under the CDBG program. Because of the urgent need for this provision, and the chance that the housing authorization bill would not be approved this year, I successfully sought its inclusion as an amendment to the continuing resolution passed by the Senate last week.

In New Jersey, Hudson County, and the city of Hoboken have historically received funding under urban county status. As Hoboken has grown, the city reached the point at which it could break with the county and receive CDBG funds on its own as a metropolitan city. This bill will give them the option of deferring metropolitan city status and continuing the current arrangement. In fact, Hoboken and Hudson County have agreed to continue this arrangement, but the agreement is contingent on enactment of this legislation. I am pleased that the extension of the entitlement status will allow the decision to be made at the local level.

I have also supported another provision in the bill which would address a serious problem that has developed in Gloucester Township, NJ, and several other areas. In Gloucester Township, there is a high rate of delinquency on property tax payments by holders of Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] mortgages. This means that other taxpayers must bear the burden of these unpaid taxes. To remedy this type of problem the bill requires the FmHA to establish escrow procedures to collect property tax payments with monthly mortgage payments. This will help municipalities collect their property tax revenues and will help FmHA borrowers better budget their tax responsibilities.

I also want to note a provision in the bill which will raise the ceiling on FHA-insured mortgages in high-cost areas. This provision is very important to New Jersey, where the current ceiling is too low to service a significant number of aspiring home-buyers.

There is one provision in the bill about which I am particularly concerned—the provision that would terminate the Housing Development Grant [HoDAG] Program at the end of fiscal yar 1989. This is a new provision that was not included in the bill as passed originally by the Senate, but which has been forced on us by those who have opposed this legislation.

This indeed is a bitter pill to swallow. The HoDAG Program is an important one that has expanded the supply of housing in many areas around the country. Terminating a vital housing program like HoDAG is bad policy, very bad policy, especially given the severity of the housing crisis in America.

Mr. President, you hear a lot of talk these days about getting down to fundamentals. Well, housing is a fundamental. It's a fundamental human need. And it's a need that's increasingly going unmet in this country. That's why this Nation must make housing a priority.

Housing and community development programs have been neglected for too long. This bill isn't perfect. But it's an important step toward giving these programs the priority they deserve.●

RETIREMENT OF RAY BARNHART AS ADMINISTRATOR OF THE FEDERAL HIGHWAY ADMINISTRATION

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, Ray Barnhart, a fellow Texan, has announced his retirement as Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration [FHWA] effective at the end of this year. I have known Ray for many years, and I think that it is important for the Members of Congress to reflect on his unique contribution to the Federal highway program. He has been an impressive Administrator and an effective advocate for the Federal highway program.

His long tenure as Administrator offers strong testimony to the qualify of his leadership at the FHWA. During his tenure there, he has accelerated the completion of our interstate highway system. He has called for the Nation to concentrate on rebuilding its infrastructure as the best insurance to maintaining the quality of its interstate system. His voice is one of constant support for the improvement of the interstate system, and for the continued health of the highway trust fund.

Frankly, I am a bit disappointed that he decided to retire at this time. With the appointment of a new Secretary of Transportation, institutional continuity is very important. Ray Barnhart has that. But I guess I understand his desire to slow down his pace. Although if I know him as well as I think I do, he will not slow down at all, and the Nation will continue to be a beneficiary of his wisdom. I wish him well and look forward to having his advice and counsel on highway issues of importance to Texas and the entire Nation.●

EXPRESSIONS OF THANKS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Republican leader have anything further?

Mr. DOLE. Nothing further except to indicate again that we are very grateful to the staff and all the others who have been thanked by the majority leader, the pages, the people we do not see much of on the Senate floor who keep this place going. Sometimes we forget those who actually make it go; we show up and everything is running, on time. So I say thank you to everyone we may have overlooked. The people who work here, whether they are operating the elevators or the restaurant or whatever, their help is appreciated. Maybe sometimes we fail to express it.

Again, I think I speak for every Member in commending the distinguished majority leader for a very good year, extraordinary leadership and patience and fairness. That is what it is all about. We look forward to another good year in 1988. I think we are all looking forward to a few days of enjoying the holiday season. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Republican leader. Erma and I join in wishing for our good friend, ROBERT DOLE, and our equally good friend, his lovely wife, Elizabeth, a happy holiday season, and a very interesting and exciting new year of 1988. Whether the beginning of 1989 finds ROBERT DOLE at the other end of the avenue or at this end of the avenue—and I hope he will be at this end—[Laughter].

In either event, he is going to have a very considerable influence upon the future of this great country. And I certainly wish him well. I hope he stays in good health during these days between now and the time that we meet again. I hope he does not get out into the snow and get snowbound too much. But anyhow, out of the bottom of my heart I thank him for the cooperation and friendship he has shown me. He has helped to make my work easier. Without his cooperation, the Senate could not have demonstrated integrity and resolve in some of the difficult matters that came before it.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in the spirit of Christmas and good will, I am going to ask the distinguished Republican leader to adjourn the Senate sine die.

Mr. DOLE. It is good to be in charge, only if temporarily.

[Laughter].

I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, I move in accordance with the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 235, that the Senate adjourn sine die.

The motion was agreed to, and at 4:26 p.m., the Senate adjourned sine die.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOLEY] at 10 o'clock and 34 minutes a.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray in the words of Psalm 100:

Make a joyful noise to the Lord, all the lands! Serve the Lord with gladness! Come into His presence with singing! Know that the Lord is God! It is He that made us, and we are His; we are His people, and the sheep of His pasture. Enter His gates with thanksgiving, and His courts with praise! Give thanks to Him, bless His name! For the Lord is good; His steadfast love endures for ever, and His faithfulness to all generations.

As the Psalmist makes clear, O God, we are grateful for all the blessings we have received. We are thankful that we live in a nation where we can speak and worship as we wish and we are ever appreciative of all the freedoms we hold dear. Bless all those who seek to do justice and to serve faithfully in this place. Whatever our task, O God, may we see in our work opportunities to contribute to understanding and good will in our communities and in our world. As we leave this place, we pray, O gracious God, that Your benediction accompany us, Your spirit sustain us, and Your love surround us. May the joy and happiness and the peace of these days be with us all. Amen.

Cuba on November 20, 1987, that it would reimplement immediately the agreement of December 14, 1984, establishing normal migration procedures between the United States and Cuba, on and after the date of enactment of this Act, consular officer of the Department of State and appropriate officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Service shall, in accordance with the procedures applicable to such cases in other countries, process any application for admission to the United States as a refugee from any Cuban national who was imprisoned for political reasons by the Government of Cuba on or after January 1, 1959, without regard to the duration of such imprisonment, except as may be necessary to reassure the orderly process of available applicants.

TITLE VIII—INDOCHINESE REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT AND PROTECTION ACT OF 1987

Sec. 801. This title may be cited as the "Indochinese Refugee Resettlement and Protection Act of 1987".

Sec. 802. (a) Findings.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the continued occupation of Cambodia by Vietnam and the oppressive conditions within Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos have led to a steady flight of persons from those countries, and the likelihood for the safe repatriation of the hundreds of thousands of refugees in the region's camps is negligible for the foreseeable future;

(2) the United States has already played a major role in responding to the Indochinese refugee problem by accepting approximately 850,000 Indochinese refugees into the United States since 1975 and has a continued interest in persons who have fled and continue to flee the countries of Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam;

(3) Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, the Philippines, and Thailand have been the front line countries bearing tremendous burdens caused by the flight of these persons;

(4) all members of the international community bear a share of the responsibility for the deterioration in the refugee first asylum situation in Southeast Asia because of slow and limited procedures, failure to implement effective policies for the region's "long-stayer" populations, failure to monitor adequately refugee protection and screening programs, particularly along the Thai-Cambodian and Thai-Laotian borders, and the instability of the Orderly Departure Program (ODP) from Vietnam which has served as the only safe, legal means of departure from Vietnam for refugees, including Amerasians and long-held "reeducation camp" prisoners;

(5) the Government of Thailand should be complimented for allowing the United States to process ration card holders in Khao I Dang and potentially qualified immigrants in Site 2 and in Khao I Dang;

(6) given the serious protection problem in Southeast Asian first asylum countries and the need to preserve first asylum in the region, the United States should continue its commitment to an ongoing, generous admission and protection program for Indochinese refugees, including urgently needed educational programs for refugees along the Thai-Cambodian and Thai-Laotian borders, until the underlying causes of refugee flight are addressed and resolved;

(7) the executive branch should seek adequate funding levels to meet United States policy objectives to ensure the well-being of Indochinese refugees in first asylum, and to process 29,500 Indochinese refugees within the overall refugee admissions level of 68,000 as determined by the President; and

(8) the Government of Thailand should be complimented for the progress that has been made in implementing an effective antipiracy program.

(b) Recommendations.—The Congress finds and recommends the following with respect to Indochinese refugees:

(1) The Secretary of State should urge the Government of Thailand to allow full access by highland refugees to the Lao Screening Program, regardless of the method of their arrival or the circumstances of their apprehension, and should intensify its efforts to persuade the Government of Laos to accept the safe return of persons rejected under the Lao Screening Program.

(2) Refugee protection and monitoring activities should be expanded along the Thai-Laotian border in an effort to identify and report on incidents of refugees forcibly repatriated into Laos.

(3) The Secretary of State should urge the Government of Thailand to address immediately the problems of protection associated with the Khmer along the Thai-Cambodian border. The Government of Thailand, along with appropriate international relief agencies, should develop and implement a plan to provide for greater security and protection for the Khmer at the Thai border.

(4) The international community should increase its efforts to assure that Indochinese refugee camps are protected, that refugees have access to a free market at Site 2, and that international observers and relief personnel are present on a 24-hour-a-day basis at Site 2 and any other camp where it is deemed necessary.

(5) The Secretary of State should make every effort to identify each person at Site 2 who may qualify for admission to the United States as an immigrant and for humanitarian parole.

(6) The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees should be pressed to upgrade staff presence and the level of advocacy to revive the international commitment with regard to the problems facing Indochinese refugees in the region, and to pursue voluntary repatriation possibilities in cases where monitoring is available and the safety of the refugees is assured.

(c) Allocations of Refugee Admissions.—Given the existing connection between ongoing resettlement and the preservation of first asylum, the United States and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees should redouble efforts to assure a stable and secure environment for refugees while dialog is pursued on other long-range solutions, it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) within the worldwide refugee admissions ceiling determined by the President, the President should allocate—

(A) at least 28,000 admissions from East Asia, first-asylum camps,

(B) at least 8,500 admissions for the Orderly Departure Program, for each of the fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990; and

(2) within the allocation made by the President for the Orderly Departure Program from Vietnam pursuant to paragraph (1)(B), admissions allocated in a fiscal year under priorities II and III of the program (as defined in the Department of State Bureau for Refugee Programs worldwide processing priorities) and the number of admissions allocated for Amerasians and their immediate family members under priority I, should be generous.

(d) International Solutions to Refugee Problems.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) renewed international efforts must be taken to address the problem of Indochinese refugees who have lived in camps for 3 years or longer; and

(2) the Secretary of State should urge the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to organize immediately an international conference to address the problems of Indochinese refugees.

Sec. 803. Reporting Requirement.—The President shall submit a report to Congress within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act on the respective roles of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Department of State in the refugee program with recommendations for improving the effectiveness and efficiency of the program.

Sec. 804. Findings and Declarations.—The Congress makes the following findings and declarations:

(a) Thousands of children in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam were fathered by American civilians and military personnel.

(b) It has been reported that many of these Amerasian children are ineligible for ration cards and often beg in the streets, peddle black market wares, or prostitute themselves.

(c) The mothers of Amerasian children in Vietnam are not eligible for government jobs or employment in government enterprises and many are estranged from their families and are destitute.

(d) Amerasian children and their families have undisputed ties to the United States and are of particular humanitarian concern to the United States.

(e) The United States has a longstanding and very strong commitment to receive the Amerasian children in Vietnam, if they desire to come to the United States.

(2) during the period consisting of the remainder, if any, of fiscal year 1988, and that portion of fiscal year 1989, that precedes the normal effective date of the applicable wage survey adjustment that is to be effective in fiscal year 1989, in an amount that exceeds, as a result of a wage survey adjustment, the rate payable under paragraph (1) of this subsection by more than the overall average percentage adjustment in the General Schedule during fiscal year 1988.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no prevailing rate employee described in subparagraph (B) or (C) of section 5342(a)(2) of title 5, United States Code, may be paid during the periods for which subsection (a) of this section is in effect at a rate that exceeds the rates that would be payable under subsection (a) were subsection (a) applicable to such employee.

(g) Nothing in this section may be construed to permit or require the payment to any employee covered by this section at a rate in excess of the rate that would be payable were this section not in effect.

(h) The Office of Personnel Management may provide for exceptions to the limitations imposed by this section if the Office determines that such exceptions are necessary to ensure the recruitment or retention of qualified employees.

SEC. 614. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to plan, implement, or administer (1) any reduction in the number of regions, districts or entry processing locations of the United States Customs Service; or (2) any consolidation or centralization of duty assessment or appraisement functions of any offices in the United States Customs Service.

SEC. 615. (b)(1) If an officer or agency allots space during fiscal year 1988 or any fiscal year thereafter, to an individual or entity under subsection (a), such space may be provided to such individual or entity without charge for rent or services.

(2) If there is an agreement for the payment of costs associated with the provision of space allotted under subsection (a) or services provided in connection with such space, nothing in title 31, United States Code, or any other provision of law, shall be construed to prohibit or restrict payment by reimbursement to the miscellaneous receipts or other appropriate account of the Treasury.

(3) For the purpose of this section, the term "services" includes the providing of lighting, heating, cooling, electricity, office furniture, office machines and equipment, telephone service (including installation of lines and equipment and other expenses associated with telephone service), and security systems (including installation and other expenses associated with security systems).

SEC. 617. Funds appropriated in this or any other Act may be used to pay travel to the United States for the immediate family of employees serving abroad in cases of death or life threatening illness of said employee.

SEC. 618. (a) None of the funds appropriated by this Act, or any other Act in this or any fiscal year hereafter, may be used in preparing, promulgating, or implementing any regulations relating to the Combined Federal Campaign if such regulations are not in conformance with subsection (b).

(b)(1)(A) Any requirements for eligibility to receive contributions through the Combined Federal Campaign shall not, to the extent that such requirements relate to litigation, public-policy advocacy, or attempting to influence legislation, be any more restrictive than any requirements established with respect to those subject matters under section 501(c)(3) or 501(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(B) Any requirements for eligibility to receive contributions through the Combined Federal Campaign shall, to the extent that such requirements relate to any subject matter other than one referred to in subparagraph (A), remain the same as the criteria in the 1984 regulations, except as otherwise provided in this section.

(C) Notwithstanding any requirement referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B), for purposes of any Combined Federal Campaign—

(i) any voluntary agency or federated group which was a named plaintiff as of September 1, 1987, in a case brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, and designated as Civil Action No. 83-0928 or 86-1367, and shall be considered to have national eligibility.

(ii) The Federal Employee Education and Assistance Fund,

(D) Public accountability standards shall remain similar to the standards which were by regulation established with respect to the 1984-1987 Combined Federal Campaigns, except that the Office of Personnel Management shall prescribe regulations under which a voluntary agency or federated group which does not exceed a certain size (as established under such regulations) may submit a copy of an appropriate Federal tax return, rather than complying with any independent auditing requirements which would otherwise apply.

(2)(A) A voluntary agency or federated group shall, for purposes of any Combined Federal Campaign in any year, be considered to have national eligibility if such agency or group—

(i) complies with all requirements for eligibility to receive contributions through the Combined Federal Campaign, without regard to any requirements relating to "local presence"; and

(ii) demonstrates that it provided services, benefits, or assistance, or otherwise conducted program activities, in—

(I) 15 or more different States over the 3-year period immediately preceding the start of the year involved; or

(II) several foreign countries or several parts of a foreign country.

For purposes of this subparagraph, an agency or federated group shall be considered to have conducted program activities in the required number of States, countries, or parts of a country, over the period of years involved, if such agency or group conducted program activities in such number of States, countries, or parts either in any single year during such period or in the aggregate over the course of such period, provided that no State, country, or part of a country is counted more than once.

(B) Notwithstanding any other provisions, eligibility requirements relating to International Services Agencies shall remain at least as inclusive as existing requirements. Any voluntary agency or federated group which attains national eligibility under subparagraph (A), and any voluntary agency which is a member of the International Services Agencies, shall be considered to have satisfied any requirements relating to "local presence".

(3)(A) If a federated group is eligible to receive donations in a Combined Federal Campaign, whether on a national level (pursuant to certification by the Office) or a local level (pursuant to certification by the local Federal coordinating committee), each voluntary agency which is a member of such group may, upon certification by the federated group, be considered eligible to participate on such national or local level, as the case may be.

(B) Notwithstanding any provision of subparagraph (A)—

(i) the Office may require a voluntary agency to provide information to support any certification submitted by a federated group with respect to such agency under subparagraph (A); and

(ii) if a determination is made, in writing after notice and opportunity to submit written comments, that the information submitted by the voluntary agency does not satisfy the applicable eligibility requirements, such agency may be barred from participating in the Combined Federal Campaign on a national or local level, as the case may be, for a period not to exceed 1 campaign year.

(4) The Office shall exercise oversight responsibility to ensure that—

(A) regulations are uniformly and equitably implemented in all local combined Federal campaigns;

(B) federated groups participating in a local combined Federal campaign are allowed to compete fairly for the role of principal combined fund organization;

(C) federated groups participating in a local combined Federal campaign are afforded—

(i) adequate opportunity to consult with the PCFO for the area involved before any plans are made final relating to the design or conduct of such campaign (including plans pertaining to any materials to be printed as part of the campaign);

(ii) adequate opportunity to participate in campaign events and other related activities; and

(iii) timely access to all reports, budgets, audits, and other records in the possession of, or under the control of, the PCFO for the areas involved; and

(D) a federated group or voluntary agency found by the Office, by a written decision issued after notice and opportunity to submit written comments, to have violated the regulations may be barred from serving as a PCFO for not to exceed 1 campaign year.

(5) The Office shall prescribe regulations to ensure that PCFOs do not make inappropriate delegations of decisionmaking authority.

(6)(A) The Office shall, in consultation with federated groups, establish a formula under which any undesignated contributions received in a local combined Federal campaign shall be allocated in any year.

(B) Under the formula for the 1990 Combined Federal Campaign, all undesignated contributions received in a local campaign shall be allocated as follows:

(i) 82 percent shall be allocated to the United Way.

(ii) 7 percent shall be allocated to the International Services Agencies.

(iii) 7 percent shall be allocated to the National Voluntary Health Agencies.

(iv) 4 percent shall, after fair and careful consideration of all eligible federated groups and agencies, be allocated by the local Federal coordinating committee among any or all of the following:

(I) National federated groups (other than any identified in clauses (i), (ii), or (iii)), except that a national federated group shall not be eligible under this subclause unless there are at least 15 members of such group participating in the local campaign, unless the members of such group collectively receive at least 4 percent of the designated contributions in the local campaign, and unless such group was granted national eligibility status for the 1987, 1988, 1989, or 1990 Combined Federal Campaign.

(II) Local federated groups.

(III) Any local, non-affiliated voluntary agency which receives at least 4 percent of the designated contributions in the local campaign.

(C) The formula set forth in subparagraph (B)—

(i) shall be phased in over the course of the 1988 and 1989 Combined Federal Campaigns;

(ii) shall be fully implemented with respect to the 1990 Combined Federal Campaigns; and

(iii) shall, with respect to any Combined Federal Campaign thereafter, be adjusted based on the experience gained in the Combined Federal Campaigns referred to in clauses (i) and (ii).

(D) Nothing in this paragraph shall apply with respect to any campaign conducted in a foreign country.

(E) All appropriate steps shall be taken to encourage donors to make designated contributions.

(7) The option for a donor to write in the name of a voluntary agency or federated group not listed in the campaign brochure to receive that individual's contribution in a local campaign shall be eliminated.

(8) The name of any individual making a designated contribution in a campaign shall, upon request of the recipient voluntary agency or federated group, be released to such agency or group, unless the contributor indicates that his or her name is not to be released. Under no circumstance may the names of contributors be sold or otherwise released by such agency or group.

(9)(A) The name of each participating voluntary agency and federated group, together with a brief description of their respective programs, shall be published in any information leaflet distributed to employees in a local combined Federal campaign. Agencies shall be arranged by federated group, with combined Federal campaign organization code numbers corresponding to each such agency and group.

27 The requirement under subparagraph (A) relating to the inclusion of program descriptions may, at the discretion of a local Federal coordinating committee, be waived for a local campaign in any year if, in the immediately preceding campaign year, contributions received through the local campaign totalled less than $100,000.

(10) Employee coercion is not to be tolerated in the Combined Federal Campaign, and protections against employee coercion shall be strengthened and clarified.

(11) The Office—

(A) may not, after the date of the enactment of this Act, grant national eligibility status to any federated group unless such group has at least 15 member voluntary agencies, each of which meets the requirements for national eligibility under paragraph (2)(A); and

(B) may withdraw federation status from any federated group for a period of not to exceed 1 campaign year if it is determined, on the record after opportunity for a hearing, that the federated group has not complied with the regulatory requirements.

(12) The Office may bar from participation in the Combined Federal Campaign, for a period not to exceed 1 campaign year, any voluntary agency which the Office determines, in writing, and after notice and opportunity to submit written comments, did not comply with a reasonable request by the Office to furnish it with information relating to such agency's campaign accounting and auditing practices.

(c) For purposes of this section, a voluntary agency or federated group having "national eligibility" is one which is eligible to participate in each local domestic combined Federal campaign.

(C) Upon disposition of the resolution received from the House, it shall no longer be in order to consider the resolution originated in the Senate.

(5) If the Senate receives from the House of Representatives a resolution described in subsection (j)(6) after the Senate has disposed of a Senate originated resolution, the action of the Senate with regard to the disposition of the Senate originated resolution shall be deemed to be the action of the Senate with regard to the House originated resolution.

"(1) In general.—A person (as defined in section 1001(5)(B)(i)) that receives farm program payments (as described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of this section as being subject to limitation) for a crop year under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) may not also hold, directly or indirectly, substantial beneficial interests in more than two entities (as defined in section 1001(5)(B)(i)(II)) engaged in farm operations that also receive such payments as separate persons, for the purposes of the application of the limitations under section 1001. Each remaining entity in which the person holds a substantial beneficial interest shall be subject to reductions in the payments to the entity subject to limitation under section 1001 in accordance with this subparagraph. Each such payment applicable to the entity shall be reduced by an amount that bears the same relation to the full payment that the person's beneficial interest in the entity bears to all beneficial interests in the entity combined. Before making such reductions, the Secretary shall notify all individuals or entities affected thereby and permit them to adjust among themselves their interests in the designated entity or entities.

"(B) Notice not provided.—If the person does not so notify the Secretary, all entities in which the person holds substantial beneficial interests shall be subject to reductions in the per person limitations under section 1001 in the manner described in subparagraph (A). "(B) FAMILY MEMBERS.—With respect to a farming operation conducted by persons, a majority of whom are individuals who are family members, an adult family member who makes a significant contribution (based on the total value of the farming operation) of active personal management or personal labor and, with respect to such contribution, who meets the standards provided in clauses (ii) and (iii) of paragraph (2)(A). "(I) an individual, including any individual participating in a farming operation as a partner in a general partnership, a participant in a joint venture, a grantor of a revocable trust, or a participant in a similar entity (as determined by the Secretary);

"(II) a corporation, joint stock company, association, limited partnership, charitable organization, or other similar entity (as determined by the Secretary), including any such entity or organization participating in the farming operation as a partner in a general partnership, a participant in a joint venture, a grantor of a revocable trust, or as a participant in a similar entity (as determined by the Secretary); and

"(III) a State, political subdivision, or agency thereof.

"(ii)(I) Such regulations shall provide that the term 'person' does not include any cooperative association of producers that markets commodities for producers with respect to the commodities so marketed for producers.

(3) by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C); and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) Any person that conducts a farming operation to produce a crop subject to limitations under this section as a tenant that rents the land for cash (or a crop share guaranteed as to the amount of the commodity to be paid in rent) and that makes a significant contribution of active personal management but not of personal labor shall be considered the same person as the landlord unless the tenant makes a significant contribution of equipment used in the farming operation.

"(E) The Secretary may not approve (for purposes of the application of the limitations under this section) any change in a farming operation that otherwise will increase the number of persons to which the limitations under this section are applied unless the Secretary determines that the change is bona fide and substantive. In the implementation of the preceding sentence, the addition of a family member to a farming operation under the criteria set out in section 1001A(b)(1)(B) shall be considered a bona fide and substantive change in the farming operation.".

(b) Allowance for Equitable Reorganizations.—To allow for the equitable reorganization of farming operations to conform to the limitations and restrictions contained in the amendments made to the Food Security Act of 1985 by this subtitle in cases in which the application of such limitations and restrictions will reduce payments to the farming operation (as determined by the Secretary), the Secretary may waive the application of the substantive change rule under section 1001(5)(E), as added by section 1303 of this Act, or any regulation of the Secretary containing a comparable rule, to any reorganization applied for prior to the final date when producers are eligible to enter into contracts to participate in the commodity programs established for the 1989 crop year, to the extent the Secretary determines appropriate to facilitate any such equitable reorganizations that does not increase such payments.

(b) Priority for Approval.—In determining which borrowers shall be permitted to prepay loans under subsection (a):

(1) The Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration shall give priority to those 8 borrowers that were determined by the Administrator, prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, to be eligible to prepay, or that prepaid, an advance under section 306A of such Act (as in effect prior to the date of the enactment of this Act), except that to retain such priority a borrower shall—

(B) complete such prepayment by disbursing funds to the Federal Financing Bank to prepay loan advances within 120 days after the issuance of such regulations.

(2) In considering requests for prepayment under subsection (a) by borrowers not described in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall permit prepayment based on the order in which borrowers are prepared to disburse funds to the Federal Financing Bank to complete such prepayments. If more than 1 borrower is so prepared at the same time, and if the combined amount of such prepayments would cause the total amount of prepayments during fiscal year 1988, under this section, to exceed $2,000,000,000, the Administrator shall—

"(2) Interest.—Amounts in each cushion of credit account shall accrue interest to the borrower at a rate of 5 percent per annum.

"(C) Credits.—The amount of interest accrued on the cash balances shall be credited to the Fund as an offsetting reduction to the amount of interest paid by the Fund on its certificates of beneficial ownership.

"(2) Rural economic development subaccount.—

"(A) Maintenance of account.—The Administrator shall maintain a subaccount within the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund to which shall be credited, on a monthly basis, a sum determined by multiplying the outstanding cushion of credit payments made after October 1, 1987, by the difference (converted to a monthly basis) between the average weighted interest rate paid on outstanding certificates of beneficial ownership issued by the Fund and the 5 percent rate of interest provided to borrowers on cushion of credit payments.

"(B) Grants.—The Administrator is authorized, from the interest differential sums credited this subaccount and from any other funds made available thereto, to provide grants or zero interest loans to borrowers under this Act for the purpose of promoting rural economic development and job creation projects, including funding for project feasibility studies, start-up costs, incubator projects, and other reasonable expenses for the purpose of fostering rural development.

CHAPTER 2—RURAL TELEPHONE BANK BORROWERS

SEC. 1411. RURAL TELEPHONE BANK INTEREST RATES AND LOAN PREPAYMENTS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) overcharging of Rural Telephone Bank borrowers has resulted in $179,000,000 in excess profits and has imperiled borrowers by raising costs to ratepayers;

(2) borrowers will be able to seek redress under section 408(b)(3)(G) of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as added by subsection (c), or may leave the Rural Telephone Bank, but in no case may the Governor of the Bank issue regulations requiring any penalty from borrowers seeking to retire debt prior to maturity; and

(3) any reduction in Federal Government[4] expenditures in the operation of the Rural Telephone Bank, from borrowers' conduct resulting from the implementation of the amendments made by subsections (b) and (c), should be included in all calculations of the budget of the United States Government, authorized under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987.

(b) Rural Telephone Bank Loan Prepayments.—[5]

(1) Prepayments authorized.—Section 408(b) of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 948(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(8) A borrower with a loan from the Rural Telephone Bank may prepay such loan (or any part thereof) by paying the face amount thereof without being required to pay the prepayment penalty set forth in the note covering such loan, if such prepayment is not made later than September 30, 1988.".

(2) Prepayment regulations.—The Governor of the Rural Telephone Bank shall issue regulations to carry out the amendment made by paragraph (1) within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act. Such regulations shall implement the amendment made by paragraph (1) without the addition of any restrictions not set forth in such amendment.

(c) Determination of Interest Rates on Rural Telephone Bank Loans.—Paragraph (3) of section 408(b) of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 948(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after the paragraph designation; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) On and after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, advances made on or after such date of enactment under loan commitments made on or after October 1, 1987, shall bear interest at the rate determined under subparagraph (C), but in no event at a rate that is less than 5 percent per annum.

"(C) The rate determined under this subparagraph shall be—

"(i) for the period beginning on the date the advance is made and ending at the close of the fiscal year in which the advance is made, the average yield (on the date of the advance) on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having a final maturity comparable to the final maturity of the advance; and

"(ii) after the fiscal year in which the advance is made, the cost of money rate for such fiscal year, as determined under subparagraph (D).

"(D) Within 30 days after the end of each fiscal year, the Governor shall determine to the nearest 0.01 percent the cost of money rate for the fiscal year, by calculating the sum of the results of the following calculations:

"(i) The aggregate of all amounts received by the telephone bank during the fiscal year from the issuance of class A stock, multiplied by the rate of return payable by the telephone bank during the fiscal year, as specified in section 406(c), to holders of class A stock, which product is divided by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year.

"(ii) The aggregate of all amounts received by the telephone bank during the fiscal year from the issuance of class B stock, multiplied by the rate at which dividends are payable by the telephone bank during the fiscal year, as specified in section 406(d), to holders of class B stock, which product is divided by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year.

"(iii) The aggregate of all amounts received by the telephone bank during the fiscal year from the issuance of class C stock, multiplied by the rate at which dividends are payable by the telephone bank during the fiscal year, under section 406(e), to holders of class C stock, which product is divided by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year.

"(iv)(I) The sum of the results of the calculations described in subclause (II).

"(II) The amounts received by the telephone bank during the fiscal year from each issue of telephone debentures and other obligations of the telephone bank, multiplied, respectively, by the rates at which interest is payable during the fiscal year by the telephone bank to holders of each issue, each of which products is divided, respectively, by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year.

"(v)(I) The amount by which the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year exceeds the aggregate of the amounts received by the telephone bank from the issuance of class A stock, class B stock, class C stock, and telephone debentures and other obligations of the telephone bank during the fiscal year, multiplied by the historic cost of money rate as of the close of the fiscal year immediately preceding the fiscal year, which product is divided by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the fiscal year.

[5] Copy read "Prepayments.".

"(II) For purposes of this clause, the term 'historic cost of money rate', with respect to the close of a preceding fiscal year, means the sum of the results of the following calculations: The amounts advanced by the telephone bank in each fiscal year during the period beginning with fiscal year 1974 and ending with the preceding fiscal year, multiplied, respectively, by the cost of money rate for the fiscal year (as set forth in the table in subparagraph (E)) for fiscal years 1974 through 1987, and as determined by the Governor under this subparagraph for fiscal years after fiscal year 1987), each of which products is divided, respectively, by the aggregate of the amounts advanced by the telephone bank during the period.

"(E) For purposes of subparagraph (D)(II), the cost of money rate for the fiscal years in which each advance was made shall be as set forth in the following table:

"For advances made in—	The cost of money rate shall be—
Fiscal year 1974	5.01 percent
Fiscal year 1975	5.85 percent
Fiscal year 1976	5.33 percent
Fiscal year 1977	5.00 percent
Fiscal year 1978	5.87 percent
Fiscal year 1979	5.93 percent
Fiscal year 1980	8.10 percent
Fiscal year 1981	9.46 percent
Fiscal year 1982	8.39 percent
Fiscal year 1983	6.99 percent
Fiscal year 1984	6.55 percent
Fiscal year 1985	5.00 percent
Fiscal year 1986	5.00 percent
Fiscal year 1987	5.00 percent.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'fiscal year' means the 12-month period ending on September 30 of the designated year.

"(F)(i) Notwithstanding subparagraph (B), if a borrower holds a commitment for a loan under this section made on or after October 1, 1987, and before the date of the enactment of this paragraph, part or all of the proceeds of which have not been advanced as of such date of enactment, the borrower may, until the later of the date the next advance under the loan commitment is made or 90 days after such date of enactment, elect to have the interest rate specified in the loan commitment apply to the unadvanced portion of the loan in lieu of the rate which (but for this clause) would apply to the unadvanced portion under this paragraph. If any borrower makes an election under this clause with respect to a loan, the Governor shall adjust the interest rate which applies to the unadvanced portion of the loan accordingly.

"(ii)(I) If the telephone bank, pursuant to section 407(b), issues telephone debentures on any date to refinance telephone debentures or other obligations of the telephone bank, the telephone bank shall, in addition to any interest rate reduction required by any other provision of this paragraph, for the period applicable to the advance, reduce the interest rate charged on each advance made under this section during the fiscal year in which the refinanced debentures or other obligations were originally issued by the amount applicable to the advance.

"(II) For purposes of subclause (I), the term 'the period applicable to the advance' means the period beginning on the issue date described in subclause (I) and ending on the earlier of the date the advance matures or is completely prepaid.

"(III) For purposes of subclause (I), the term 'the amount applicable to the advance' means an amount which fully reflects that percentage of the funds saved by the telephone bank as a result of the refinancing which is equal to the percentage representation of the advance in all advances described in subclause (I).

"(IV) Within 60 days after any issue date described in subclause (I), the Governor shall amend the loan documentation for each advance described in subclause (I), as necessary, to reflect any interest rate reduction applicable to the advance by reason of this clause, and shall notify each affected borrower of the reduction.

"(G) Within 30 days after the publication of any determination made under subparagraph (D), any affected borrower may obtain review of the determination, or any other equitable relief as may be determined appropriate, by the United States court of appeals for the judicial circuit in which the borrower does business by filing a written petition requesting the court to set aside or modify such determination. On receipt of such a petition, the clerk of the court shall transmit a copy of the petition to the Governor. On receipt of a copy of such a petition from the clerk of the court, the Governor shall file with the court the record on which the determination is based. The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the determination.

"(H) Within 5 days after determining the cost of money rate for a fiscal year, the Governor shall—

"(i) cause the determination to be published in the Federal Register in accordance with section 552 of title 5, United States Code; and

"(ii) furnish a copy of the determination to the Comptroller General of the United States.

"(I) The Comptroller General shall review, on an expedited basis, each determination a copy of which is received from the Governor and, within 15 days after the date of such receipt, furnish Congress a report on the accuracy of the determination.

"(J) The telephone bank shall not sell or otherwise dispose of any loan made under this section, except as provided in this paragraph.".

SEC. 1413. ESTABLISHMENT OF RESERVE FOR LOSSES DUE TO INTEREST RATE FLUCTUATIONS.

Within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Governor of the telephone bank shall transfer to the reserve for losses due to interest rate fluctuations all amounts in the reserve for contingencies as of the date of the enactment of this subsection. Amounts in the reserve for interest rate fluctuations may be expended only to cover operating losses of the telephone bank (other than losses attributable to loan defaults) and only after taking into consideration any recommendations made by the General Accounting Office under section 1413(b) of the Rural Telephone Bank Borrowers Fairness Act of 1987.".

(b) STUDY BY GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.—Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the General Accounting Office shall complete a study of operations of the telephone bank and report its recommendations to the Committees on Agriculture and Government Operations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate with respect to—

SEC. 1508. ETHANOL USAGE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is dependent for a large and growing share of its energy needs on the Middle East at a time when world petroleum reserves are declining;

(2) the burning of gasoline causes pollution;

(3) ethanol can be blended with gasoline to produce a cleaner source of fuel;

(4) ethanol can be produced from grain, a renewable resource that is in considerable surplus in the United States;

(5) the conversion of grain into ethanol would reduce farm program costs and grain surpluses; and

(6) increasing the quantity of motor fuels that contain at least 10 percent ethanol from current levels to 50 percent by 1992 would create thousands of new jobs in ethanol production facilities.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should use authority provided under the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.) to require greater use of ethanol as motor fuel.

SEC. 1509. DEMONSTRATION OF FAMILY INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM.

"SEC. 21. DEMONSTRATION OF FAMILY INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon written application of the State of Washington (in this section referred to as the 'State') and after the approval of such application by the Secretary, the State may conduct a Family Independence Demonstration Project (in this section referred to as the 'Project') in all or in part of the State in accordance with this section to determine whether the Project, as an alternative to providing benefits under the food stamp program, would more effectively break the cycle of poverty and would provide families with opportunities for economic independence and strengthened family functioning.

"(b) NATURE OF PROJECT.—In an application submitted under subsection (a), the State shall provide the following:

"(1) Except as provided in this section, the provisions of chapter 434 of the 1987 Washington Laws, as enacted in May 1987, shall apply to the operation of the Project.

"(2) All of the following terms and conditions shall be in effect under the Project:

"(A)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), individuals with respect to whom benefits may be paid under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and such other individuals as are included in the Project pursuant to chapter 434 of the 1987 Washington Laws, as enacted in May 1987, shall be eligible to participate in the Project in lieu of receiving benefits under the food stamp program and cash assistance under any other Federal program covered by the Project.

"(ii) Individuals who receive only child care or medical benefits under the Project shall not be eligible to receive food assistance under the Project. Such individuals may receive coupons under the food stamp program if eligible.

"(B) Individuals who participate in the Project shall receive for each month an amount of cash assistance that is not less than the total value of the assistance such individuals would otherwise receive, in the aggregate, under the food stamp program and any cash-assistance Federal program covered by the Project for such month, including income and resource exclusions and deductions, and benefit levels.

"(C)(i) The State may provide a standard benefit for food assistance under the Project, except that individuals who participate in the Project shall receive as food assistance for a month an amount of cash that is not less than the value of the assistance such individuals would otherwise receive under the food stamp program.

"(ii) The State may provide a cash benefit for food assistance equal to the value of the thrifty food plan.

"(D) Each month participants in the Project shall be notified by the State of the amount of Project assistance that is provided as food assistance for such month.

"(E) The State shall have a program to require participants to engage in employment and training activities carried out under chapter 434 of the 1987 Washington Laws, as enacted in May 1987.[6]

"(F) Food assistance shall be provided under the Project—

"(i) to any individual who is accepted for participation in the Project, not later than 30 days after such individual applies to participate in the Project;

"(ii) to any participant for the period that begins on the date such participant applies to participate in the Project, except that the amount of such assistance shall be reduced to reflect the pro rata value of any coupons received under the food stamp program for such period for the benefit of such participant; and

"(iii) until—

"(I) the participant's cash assistance under the Project is terminated;

"(II) such participant is informed of such termination and is advised of the eligibility requirements for participation in the food stamp program;

"(III) the State determines whether such participant will be eligible to receive coupons as a member of a household under the food stamp program; and

"(IV) coupons under the food stamp program are received by such participant if such participant will be eligible to receive coupons as a member of a household under the food stamp program.

"(G)(i)[7] Paragraphs (1)(B), (8), (10), and (19) of section 11(e) shall apply with respect to the participants in the Project in the same manner as such paragraphs apply with respect to participants in the food stamp program.

"(ii) Each individual who contacts the State in person during office hours to make what may reasonably be interpreted as an oral or written request to participate in the Project shall receive and shall be permitted to file on the same day that such contact is first made, an application form to participate in the Project.

"(iii) The Project shall provide for telephone contact by, mail delivery of forms to and mail return of forms by, and subsequent home or telephone interview with, the elderly persons, physically or mentally handicapped, and persons otherwise unable, solely because of transportation difficulties and similar hardships, to appear in person.

"(iv) An individual who applies to participate in the Project may be represented by another person in the review process if the other person has been clearly designated as the representative of such individual for that purpose, by such individual or the spouse of such individual, and, in the case of the review process, the representative is an adult who is sufficiently aware of relevant circumstances, except that the State may—

"(I) restrict the number of individuals who may be represented by such person; and

"(II) otherwise establish criteria and verification standards for representation under this clause.

"(v) The State shall provide a method for reviewing applications to participate in the Project submitted by, and distributing food assistance under the Project to, individuals who do not reside in permanent dwellings or who have no fixed mailing address. In carrying out the preceding sentence, the State shall take such steps as are necessary to ensure that participation in the Project is limited to eligible individuals.

"(3) An assurance that the State will allow any individual to apply to participate in the food stamp program without applying to participate in the Project.

"(4) An assurance that the cost of food assistance provided under the Project will not be such that the aggregate amount of payments made under this section by the Secretary to the State over the period of the Project will exceed the sum of—

"(A) the anticipated aggregate value of the coupons that would have been distributed under the food stamp program if the individuals who participate in the Project had participated instead in the food stamp program; and

"(B) the portion of the administrative costs for which the State would have received reimbursement under—

"(i) subsections (a) and (g) of section 16 (without regard to the first proviso to such subsection (g)) if the individuals who participated in the Project had participated instead in the food stamp program; and

"(ii) section 16(h) if the individuals who participated in the Project had participated in an employment and training program under section 6(d)(4);

except that this paragraph shall not be construed to prevent the State from claiming payments for additional households that would qualify for benefits under the food stamp program in the absence of a cash out of such benefits as a result of changes in economic, demographic, and other conditions in the State or a subsequent change in the benefit levels approved by the State legislature.

"(5) An assurance that the State will continue to carry out the food stamp program while the State carries out the Project.

"(6) If there is a change in existing State law that would eliminate guaranteed benefits or reduce the rights of applicants or participants under this section during, or as a result of participation in, the Project, the Project shall be terminated.

"(7) An assurance that the Project shall include procedures and due process guarantees no less beneficial than those which are available under Federal law and under State law to participants in the food stamp program.

"(8)(A) An assurance that, except as provided in subparagraph (B), the State will carry out the Project during a 5-year period beginning on the date the first individual is approved for participation in the Project.

"(B) The Project may be terminated 180 days after—

"(i) the State gives notice to the Secretary that it intends to terminate the Project; or

"(ii) the Secretary, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, determines that the State materially failed to comply with this section.

"(c) Funding.—If an application submitted under subsection (a) by the State complies with the requirements specified in subsection (b), then the Secretary shall—

"(1) approve such application; and

"(2) from funds appropriated under this Act, pay the State for—

"(A) the actual cost of the food assistance provided under the Project; and

"(B) the percentage of the administrative costs incurred by the State to provide food assistance under the Project that is equal to the percentage of the State's aggregate administrative costs incurred in operating the food stamp program in the most recent fiscal year for which data are available, that was paid under subsections (a), (g), and (h) of section 16 of this Act.

"(d)(1) Project Application.—Unless and until an application to participate in the Project is approved, and food assistance under the Project is made available to the applicant—

"(A) such application shall also be treated as an application to participate in the food stamp program; and

"(B) section 11(e)(9) shall apply with respect to such application.

"(2) Coupons provided under the food stamp program with respect to an individual who—

"(A) is participating in such program; and

"(B) applies to participate in the Project;

may not be reduced or terminated because such individual applies to participate in the Project.

"(3) For purposes of the food stamp program, individuals who participate in the Project shall not be considered to be members of a household during the period of such participation.

"(e) Waiver.—The Secretary shall (with respect to the Project) waive compliance with any requirement contained in this Act (other than this section) that (if applied) would prevent the State from carrying out the Project or effectively achieving its purpose.

"(f) Construction.—For purposes of any other Federal, State or local law—

"(1) cash assistance provided under the Project that represents food assistance shall be treated in the same manner as coupons provided under the food stamp program are treated; and [8] "(2) participants in the program who receive food assistance under the Project shall be treated in the same manner as recipients of coupons under the food stamp program are treated.

"(g) Project Audits.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall—

"(1) conduct periodic audits of the operation of the Project to verify the amounts payable to the State from time to time under subsection (b)(4); and

"(2) submit to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report describing the results of each such audit.

"(h) Evaluation.—With funds appropriated under section 18(a)(1), the Secretary shall conduct, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, an evaluation of the Project.".

TITLE III—EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Subtitle A—Guaranteed Student Loan Program Savings

SEC. 3001. RECOVERY OF EXCESS CASH RESERVES ACCUMULATED UNDER THE GUARANTEED STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM.

(a) In General.—Section 422 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1072) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Reduction of Excess Cash Reserves.—

"(1) Limitation on maximum cash reserves.—A guaranty agency shall not accumulate cash reserves in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 40 percent of the total amount paid by that agency on insurance claims during the preceding fiscal year;

"(B) 0.3 percent of original principal amount of loans that are insured by that agency and that are outstanding at the end of such preceding fiscal year;

"(C) an amount which, when combined with all other parts of total agency reserves, equals 0.4 percent of such original principal amount;

"(D) $500,000; or

"(E) the amount required to comply with the reserve requirements of a State law as in effect on October 17, 1986.

"(2) Recovery of excess cash reserves.—The Secretary shall, not later than March 31, 1988, determine for each guaranty agency the maximum cash reserve permitted under paragraph (1) for fiscal year 1986. Subject to paragraphs (3) and (4), if the Secretary determines that any guaranty agency had, at the end of fiscal year 1986, a cash reserve that exceeded such maximum, the Secretary shall direct the agency to eliminate such excess by any one or more of the following methods, as selected by the guaranty agency:

"(A) by repaying any advances to such agency made by the Secretary under this section that are not required to be repaid under subsection (d);

"(B) by withholding and canceling claims for reimbursement otherwise payable under section 428(c)(1);

"(C) by reducing the amount of payments for which application will be made by such agency under section 428(f); or

"(D) by any other method of reducing payments from or increasing payments to the Federal Government, including payment of additional reinsurance fees in addition to the fees required by section 428(c)(9), as proposed by the agency and agreed to by the Secretary.

"(3) APPEALS BASED ON SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES.—(A) If the Secretary determines, on the basis of an application from a guaranty agency, that—

"(i) the agency's financial position has deteriorated significantly since the end of the preceding fiscal year;

"(ii) significant changes in the economic circumstances (such as a change in agency current cash reserves) or the loan insurance program render the limitations of paragraph (1) inadequate for the continued functioning of the agency; or

"(iii) in recovering funds as required by this subsection, a guaranty agency would be compelled to violate contractual obligations existing on the date of enactment of this subsection that require a specified level of reserve funds to be maintained by such agency; the Secretary may waive, in whole or in part, the imposition of the remedies required by paragraph (2) for such agency.

"(B) The Secretary shall respond to request for waivers from guaranty agencies in an expedited manner and, except for unusual circumstances or with the consent of the guaranty agency, shall resolve such request within 6 weeks of submission.

"(4) RECOVERY LIMITS.—The Secretary shall not require a total reduction of cash reserves for all guaranty agencies in excess of $250,000,000 during fiscal year 1988. If the total of cash reserves of all guaranty agencies exceeds the maximum amounts permitted under paragraph (1) by more than $250,000,000, the Secretary shall ratably reduce the amounts that guaranty agencies are directed to eliminate under paragraph (2), so that the total excess cash reserves to be eliminated equals $250,000,000.

"(5) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subsection—

"(A) the 'cash reserves' for any guaranty agency for any fiscal year are equal to the agency's cumulative cash receipts less the agency's cumulative cash disbursements at the end of such fiscal year;

"(B) the 'total reserves' for any guaranty agency for any fiscal year are equal to the agency's cash reserves plus the agency's cumulative accounts receivable less the agency's accounts payable, as of the end of such fiscal year;

"(C) the term 'cumulative cash receipts' includes such receipts as insurance premiums, Federal reinsurance payments, and collections on defaulted loans;

"(D) the term 'cumulative cash disbursements' includes such disbursements as payments for default claims, repayment of Federal advances, transfers to other State activities, and payment of collection costs and other operating costs;

"(E) the term 'accounts receivable' includes Federal reinsurance payments and administrative cost allowances owed but not yet paid to the guaranty agency, as of the end of a fiscal year; and

"(F) the term 'accounts payable' includes collections and reinsurance fees due (but not paid) to the Department of Education, as of the end of a fiscal year.".

"(2) If the Secretary determines on the basis of a standard, extended, or partial extended survey or otherwise, that a home health agency that is certified for participation under this title is no longer in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) and determines that the deficiencies involved do not immediately jeopardize the health and safety of the individuals to whom the agency furnishes items and services, the Secretary may (for a period not to exceed 6 months) impose intermediate sanctions developed pursuant to subsection (f), in lieu of terminating the certification of the agency. If, after such a period of intermediate sanctions, the agency is still no longer in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a), the Secretary shall terminate the certification of the agency.

"(3) If the Secretary determines that a home health agency that is certified for participation under this title is in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) but, as of a previous period, did not meet such requirements, the Secretary may provide for a civil money penalty under subsection (f)(2)(A)(i) for the days in which it finds that the agency was not in compliance with such requirements.

"(4) The Secretary may continue payments under this title with respect to a home health agency not in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) over a period of not longer than 6 months, if—

"(A) the State or local survey agency finds that it is more appropriate to take alternative action to assure compliance of the agency with the requirements than to terminate the certification of the agency,

"(B) the agency has submitted a plan and timetable for corrective action to the Secretary for approval and the Secretary approves the plan of corrective action, and

"(C) the agency agrees to repay to the Federal Government payments received under this subparagraph if the corrective action is not taken in accordance with the approved plan and timetable.

The Secretary shall establish guidelines for approval of corrective actions requested by home health agencies under this subparagraph.

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall develop and implement, by not later than April 1, 1989—

"(A) a range of intermediate sanctions to apply to home health agencies under the conditions described in subsection (e), and

"(B) appropriate procedures for appealing determinations relating to the imposition of such sanctions.

"(2)(A) The intermediate sanctions developed under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(i) civil money penalties for each day of noncompliance,

"(ii) suspension of all or part of the payments to which a home health agency would otherwise be entitled under this title with respect to items and services furnished by a home health agency on or after the date on which the Secretary determines that intermediate sanctions should be imposed pursuant to subsection (e)(2), and

"(iii) the appointment of temporary management to oversee the operation of the home health agency and to protect and assure the health and safety of the individuals under the care of the agency while improvements are made in order to bring the agency into compliance with all the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a).

The temporary management under clause (iii) shall not be terminated until the Secretary has determined that the agency has the management capability to ensure continued compliance with all the requirements referred to in that clause.

"(B) The sanctions specified in subparagraph (A) are in addition to sanctions otherwise available under State or Federal law and shall not be construed as limiting other remedies, including any remedy available to an individual at common law.

"(C) A finding to suspend payment under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall terminate when the Secretary finds that the home health agency is in substantial compliance with all the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) and subsection (a).

"(3) The Secretary shall develop and implement, by not later than April 1, 1989, specific procedures with respect to the conditions under which each of the intermediate sanctions developed under paragraph (1) is to be applied, including the amount of any fines and the severity of each of these sanctions. Such procedures shall be designed so as to minimize the time between identification of deficiencies and imposition of these sanctions and shall provide for the imposition of incrementally more severe fines for repeated or uncorrected deficiencies.".

(b) Effective Date.—Except as otherwise specifically provided in subsections (e) and (f) of section 1891 of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (a)), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the first day of the 18th calendar month to begin after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The Secretary shall also review the reasonableness of payment levels for comparable in-office diagnostic tests.

"(2) Deductions shall be in accordance with a formula and schedule agreed to by the Secretary, the physician and the provider, organization, or plan. The deductions shall be made from the amounts otherwise payable to the physician under this title as long as the physician continued to be employed or affiliated by a medical services agreement.

"(3) Such deduction shall not be made until 6 months after the Secretary notifies the provider, organization, or plan of the amount to be deducted and the particular physicians to whom the deductions are attributable.

"(4) A deduction made under this subsection shall relieve the physician of the obligation (to the extent of the amount collected) to the United States, but the provider, organization, or plan shall have a right of action to collect from such physician the amount deducted pursuant to this subsection (including accumulated interest).

"(5) No deduction shall be made under this subsection if, within the 6-month period after notice is given to the provider, organization, or plan, the physician pays the past-due obligation, or ceases to be employed by the provider, organization, or plan.

"(6) The Secretary shall also apply the provisions of this subsection in the case of a physician who is a member of a group practice, if such group practice submits bills under this program as a group, rather than by individual physicians.

Such rates shall be applied in determining per capita rates of payment under paragraph (1) with respect to at least one eligible organization conducting a demonstration project under this section.

(B) The amount of payment under paragraph (2) or (3) may be retroactively adjusted to take into account any difference between the actual number of individuals enrolled in the plan under this section and the number of such individuals estimated to be so enrolled in determining the amount of the advance payment.

(5) The payment to an eligible organization under this section for individuals enrolled under this section with the organization and entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B of the Social Security Act shall be made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund established under such Act in such proportions from each such trust fund as the Secretary deems to be fair and equitable taking into consideration benefits attributable to such parts A and B, respectively.

(6) During any period in which an individual is enrolled with an eligible organization conducting a demonstration project under this section, only the eligible organization (and no other individual or person) shall be entitled to receive payments from the Secretary under this title for community nursing and ambulatory care (as defined in subsection (b)(1)) furnished to the individual.

(e) RESTRICTION ON PREMIUMS, DEDUCTIBLES, COPAYMENTS, AND COINSURANCE.—

(1) In no case may the portion of an eligible organization's premium rate and the actuarial value of its deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments charged (with respect to community nursing and ambulatory care) to individuals who are enrolled under this section with the organization, exceed the actuarial value of the coinsurance and deductibles that would be applicable on the average to individuals enrolled under this section with the organization (or, if the Secretary finds that adequate data are not available to determine that actuarial value, the actuarial value of the coinsurance and deductibles applicable on the average to individuals in the area, in the State, or in the United States, eligible to enroll under this section with the organization, or other appropriate data) and entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B of the Social Security Act, if they were not members of an eligible organization.

(2) If the eligible organization provides to its members enrolled under this section services in addition to community nursing and ambulatory care, election of coverage for such additional services shall be optional for such members and such organization shall furnish such members with information on the portion of its premium rate or other charges applicable to such additional services. In no case may the sum of—

(A) the portion of such organization's premium rate charged, with respect to such additional services, to members enrolled under this section, and

(B) the actuarial value of its deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments charged, with respect to such services to such members exceed the adjusted community rate for such services (as defined in section 1876(e)(3) of the Social Security Act).

(3)(A) Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), each agreement to conduct a demonstration project under this section shall provide that if—

is less than

(ii) the average of the per capita rates of payment to be made under subsection (d)(1) at the beginning of the 12-month period (as determined on such basis as the Secretary determines appropriate) described in such subsection for members enrolled under this section with the organization,

the eligible organization shall provide to such members the additional benefits described in section 1876(g)(3) of the Social Security Act which are selected by the eligible organization and which the Secretary finds are at least equal in value to the difference between that average per capita payment and the adjusted community rate (as so reduced).

(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to any organization which elects to receive a lesser payment to the extent that there is no longer a difference between the average per capita payment and adjusted community rate (as so reduced).

(C) An organization conducting a demonstration project under this section may provide (with the approval of the Secretary) that a part of the value of such additional benefits under subparagraph (A) be withheld and reserved by the Secretary as provided in section 1876(g)(5) of the Social Security Act.

(4) The provisions of paragraphs (3), (5), and (6) of section 1876(g) of the Social Security Act shall apply in the same manner to agreements under this section as they apply to risk-sharing contracts under section 1876 of such Act, and, for this purpose, any reference in such paragraphs to paragraph (2) is deemed a reference to paragraph (3) of this subsection.

(5) Section 1876(e)(4) of the Social Security Act shall apply to eligible organizations under this section in the same manner as it applies to eligible organizations under section 1876 of such Act.

"(2) A waiver shall not be granted under this subsection unless the State provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that—

"(A) necessary safeguards (including adequate standards for provider participation) have been taken to protect the health and welfare of individuals provided services under the waiver and to assure financial accountability for funds expended with respect to such services;

"(B) with respect to individuals 65 years of age or older who—

"(i) are entitled to medical assistance for skilled nursing or intermediate care facility services under the State plan,

"(III) 2 percent for each year beginning after the base year and ending before the waiver year.

"(iii) The Secretary shall develop and promulgate by regulation (by not later than October 1, 1989)—

"(I) a method, based on an index of appropriately weighted indicators of changes in the wages and prices of the mix of goods and services which comprise both skilled nursing facility services and intermediate care facility services (regardless of the source of payment for such services), for projecting the percentage increase for purposes of clause (i)(I);

"(II) a method, based on an index of appropriately weighted indicators of changes in the wages and prices of the mix of goods and services which comprise home and community-based services (regardless of the source of payment for such services), for projecting the percentage increase for purposes of clause (ii)(I); and

"(III) a method for projecting, on a State specific basis, the percentage increase in the number of residents in each State who are over 75 years of age for any period.

Effective on and after the date the Secretary promulgates the regulation under clause (iii), any reference in this subparagraph to the 'lesser of 7 percent' shall be deemed to be a reference to the 'greater of 7 percent'.

"(C) In this paragraph:

"(i) The term 'home and community-based services' includes services described in sections 1905(a)(7) and 1905(a)(8), services described in subsection (c)(4)(B), services described in paragraph (4)(B), personal care services, and services furnished pursuant to a waiver under subsection (c).

"(II) For purposes of subparagraph (C), in the case of a State that does not report expenditures on the basis of the age categories described in such subparagraph for a year ending before the date of the enactment of this subsection, the term 'base year' means fiscal year 1989.

"(iii) The term 'intermediate care facility services' does not include services furnished in an institution certified in accordance with section 1905(d).

"(6)(A) A determination by the Secretary to deny a request for a waiver (or extension of waiver) under this subsection shall be subject to review to the extent provided under section 1116(b).

"(B) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, if the Secretary denies a request of the State for an extension of a waiver under this subsection, any waiver under this subsection in effect on the date such request is made shall remain in effect for a period of not less than 90 days after the date on which the Secretary denies such request (or, if the State seeks review of such determination in accordance with subparagraph (A), the date on which a final determination is made with respect to such review).".

SEC. 5062. TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM BY AIRCRAFT THROUGH UNITED STATES AIR SPACE.

(a) In General.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no form of plutonium may be transported by aircraft through the air space of the United States from a foreign nation to a foreign nation unless the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has certified to Congress that the container in which such plutonium is transported is safe, as determined in accordance with subsection (b), the second undesignated paragraph under section 201 of Public Law 94-79 (89 Stat. 413; 42 U.S.C. 5841 note), and all other applicable laws.

(b) Responsibilities of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.—

(1) Determination of Safety.—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall determine whether the container referred to in subsection (a) is safe for use in the transportation of plutonium by aircraft and transmit to Congress a certification for the purposes of such subsection in the case of each container determined to be safe.

(2) Testing.—In order to make a determination with respect to a container under paragraph (1), the Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall—

(A) require an actual drop test from maximum cruising altitude of a full-scale sample of such container loaded with test materials; and

(B) require an actual crash test of a cargo aircraft fully[77] loaded with full-scale samples of such container loaded with test material unless the Commission determines, after consultation with an independent scientific review panel, that the stresses on the container produced by other tests used in developing the container exceed the stresses which would occur during a worst case plutonium air shipment accident.

(3) Limitation.—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission may not certify under this section that a container is safe for use in the transportation of plutonium by aircraft if the container ruptured or released its contents during testing conducted in accordance with paragraph (2).

(4) Evaluation.—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall evaluate the container certification required by title II of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5841 et seq.) and subsection (a) in accordance with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (83 Stat. 852; 42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) and all other applicable law.

(3) a statement that the container did not rupture or release its contents into the environment during testing.

(d) Design of Testing Procedures.—The tests required by subsection (b) shall be designed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to replicate actual worst case transportation conditions to the maximum extent practicable. In designing such tests, the Commission shall provide for public notice of the proposed test procedures, provide a reasonable opportunity for public comment on such procedures, and consider such comments, if any.

(e) Testing Results: Reports and Public Disclosure.—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall transmit to Congress a report on the results of each test conducted under this section and shall make such results available to the public.

(f) Alternative Routes and Means of Transportation.—With respect to any shipments of plutonium from a foreign nation to a foreign nation which are subject to United States consent rights contained in an Agreement for Peaceful Nuclear Cooperation, the President is authorized to make every effort to pursue and conclude arrangements for alternative routes and means of transportation, including sea shipment. All such arrangements shall be subject to stringent physical security conditions, and other conditions designed to protect the public health and safety, and provisions of this section, and all other applicable laws.

(g) Inapplicability to Medical Devices.—Subsections (a) through (e) shall not apply with respect to plutonium in any form contained in a medical device designed for individual human application.

(h) Inapplicability to Military Uses.—Subsections (a) through (e) shall not apply to plutonium in the form of nuclear weapons nor to other shipments of plutonium determined by the Department of Energy to be directly connected with the United States national security or defense programs.

(i) Inapplicability to Previously Certified Containers.—This section shall not apply to any containers for the shipment of plutonium previously certified as safe by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission under Public Law 94-79 (89 Stat. 413; 42 U.S.C. 5841 note).

(j) Payment of Costs.—All costs incurred by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission associated with the testing program required by this section, and administrative costs related thereto, shall be reimbursed to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission by any foreign country receiving plutonium shipped through United States airspace in containers specified by the Commission.

SEC. 5101. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This subtitle may be cited as the "Federal Onshore Oil and Gas Leasing Reform Act of 1987".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in this subtitle to the "Act of February 25, 1920", is a reference to the Act of February 25, 1920, entitled "An Act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain" (30 U.S.C. 181 and following).

SEC. 5102. OIL AND GAS LEASING SYSTEM.

(a) COMPETITIVE BIDDING.—Section 17(b)(1) of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(b)(1)), is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1)(A) All lands to be leased which are not subject to leasing under paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be leased as provided in this paragraph to the highest responsible qualified bidder by competitive bidding under general regulations in units of not more than 2,560 acres, except in Alaska, where units shall be not more than 5,760 acres. Such units shall be as nearly compact as possible. Lease sales shall be conducted by oral bidding. Lease sales shall be held for each State where eligible lands are available at least quarterly and more frequently if the Secretary of the Interior determines such sales are necessary. A lease shall be conditioned upon the payment of a royalty at a rate of not less than 12.5 percent in amount or value of the production removed or sold from the lease. The Secretary shall accept the highest bid from a responsible qualified bidder which is equal to or greater than the national minimum acceptable bid, without evaluation of the value of the lands proposed for lease. Leases shall be issued within 60 days following payment by the successful bidder of the remainder of the bonus bid, if any, and the annual rental for the first lease year. All bids for less than the national minimum acceptable bid shall be rejected. Lands for which no bids are received or for which the highest bid is less than the national minimum acceptable bid shall be offered promptly within 30 days for leasing under subsection (c) of this section and shall remain available for leasing for a period of 2 years after the competitive lease sale.

"(B) The national minimum acceptable bid shall be $2 per acre for a period of 2 years from the date of enactment of the Federal Onshore Oil and Gas Leasing Reform Act of 1987. Thereafter, the Secretary may establish by regulation a higher national minimum acceptable bid for all leases based upon a finding that such action is necessary: (i) to enhance financial returns to the United States; and (ii) to promote more efficient management of oil and gas resources on Federal lands. Ninety days before the Secretary makes any change in the national minimum acceptable bid, the Secretary shall notify the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. The proposal or promulgation of any regulation to establish a national minimum acceptable bid shall not be considered a major Federal action subject to the requirements of section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.".

(b) NONCOMPETITIVE LEASING.—Section 17(c) of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(c)), is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) If the lands to be leased are not leased under subsection (b)(1) of this section or are not subject to competitive leasing under subsection (b)(2) of this section, the person first making application for the lease who is qualified to hold a lease under this Act shall be entitled to a lease of such lands without competitive bidding, upon payment of a non-refundable application fee of at least $75. A lease under this subsection shall be conditioned upon the payment of a royalty at a rate of 12.5 percent in amount or value of the production removed or sold from the lease. Leases shall be issued within 60 days of the date on which the Secretary identifies the first responsible qualified applicant.

"(2)(A) Lands (i) which were posted for sale under subsection (b)(1) of this section but for which no bids were received or for which the highest bid was less than the national minimum acceptable bid and (ii) for which, at the end of the period referred to in subsection (b)(1) of this section no lease has been issued and no lease application is pending under paragraph (1) of this subsection, shall again be available for leasing only in accordance with subsection (b)(1) of this section.

"(B) The land in any lease which is issued under paragraph (1) of this subsection or under subsection (b)(1) of this section which lease terminates, expires, is cancelled or is relinquished shall again be available for leasing only in accordance with subsection (b)(1) of this section.".

(c) Rentals.—Section 17(d) of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(d)), is amended to read as follows:

"(d) All leases issued under this section, as amended by the Federal Onshore Oil and Gas Leasing Reform Act of 1987, shall be conditioned upon payment by the lessee of a rental of not less than $1.50 per acre per year for the first through fifth years of the lease and not less than $2 per acre per year for each year thereafter. A minimum royalty in lieu of rental of not less than the rental which otherwise would be required for that lease year shall be payable at the expiration of each lease year beginning on or after a discovery of oil or gas in paying quantities on the lands leased.".

(d) Notice and Reclamation.—(1) Section 17 of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226), is amended by redesignating subsections (f) through (k) as subsections (i) through (n) and by adding the following new subsections (f) through (h):

"(f) At least 45 days before offering lands for lease under this section, and at least 30 days before approving applications for permits to drill under the provisions of a lease or substantially modifying the terms of any lease issued under this section, the Secretary shall provide notice of the proposed action. Such notice shall be posted in the appropriate local office of the leasing and land management agencies. Such notice shall include the terms or modified lease terms and maps or a narrative description of the affected lands. Where the inclusion of maps in such notice is not practicable, maps of the affected lands shall be made available to the public for review. Such maps shall show the location of all tracts to be leased, and of all leases already issued in the general area. The requirements of this subsection are in addition to any public notice required by other law.

"(g) The Secretary of the Interior, or for National Forest lands, the Secretary of Agriculture, shall regulate all surface-disturbing activities conducted pursuant to any lease issued under this Act, and shall determine reclamation and other actions as required in the interest of conservation of surface resources. No permit to drill on an oil and gas lease issued under this Act may be granted without the analysis and approval by the Secretary concerned of a plan of operations covering proposed surface-disturbing activities within the lease area. The Secretary concerned shall, by rule or regulation, establish such standards as may be necessary to ensure that an adequate bond, surety, or other financial arrangement will be established prior to the commencement of surface-disturbing activities on any lease, to ensure the complete and timely reclamation of the lease tract, and the restoration of any lands or surface waters adversely affected by lease operations after the abandonment or cessation of oil and gas operations on the lease. The Secretary shall not issue a lease or leases or approve the assignment of any lease or leases under the terms of this section to any person, association, corporation, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or person controlled by or under common control with such person, association, or corporation, during any period in which, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior or Secretary of Agriculture, such entity has failed or refused to comply in any material respect with the reclamation requirements and other standards established under this section for any prior lease to which such requirements and standards applied. Prior to making such determination with respect to any such entity the concerned Secretary shall provide such entity with adequate notification and an opportunity to comply with such reclamation requirements and other standards and shall consider whether any administrative or judicial appeal is pending. Once the entity has complied with the reclamation requirement or other standard concerned an oil or gas lease may be issued to such entity under this Act.

"(h) The Secretary of the Interior may not issue any lease on National Forest System Lands reserved from the public domain over the objection of the Secretary of Agriculture.".

(2) Section 31(h) of the Act of February 25, 1920 (30 U.S.C. 188(h)), is amended by striking out "section 17(j)" and substituting "section 17(m)".

The remainder shall be covered in the special account referred to in subsection (i) in the same manner as receipts from fees collected pursuant to this section. Fifty percent of the amount retained shall be expended only for maintenance of transportation systems at the unit where the charge was imposed. The remaining 50 percent of the retained amount shall be expended only for activities related to resource protection at such units.

"(m) Where the primary public access to a unit of the National Park System is provided by a concessioner, the Secretary may charge an admission fee at such units only to the extent that the total of the fee charged by the concessioner for access to the unit and the admission fee does not exceed the maximum amount of the admission fee which could otherwise be imposed under subsection (a).".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

LUSO-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an exchange of letters I had with the Agency for International Development regarding the work and programs supported by the Luso-American Development Foundation.

The foundation, now over 2 years old, is a privately chartered Portuguese institution under Portuguese law. The foundation seeks to advance Portuguese economic and social development through linkage and cooperation between Portugal and United States in the scientific, cultural, educational, commercial, and entrepreneurial fields.

United States economic assistance to Portugal has helped to capitalize the foundation. As of August 1987, the endowment of the foundation totaled $112.8 million and roughly $14 million had been disbursed.

This Development Foundation represents an important centerpiece of the United States-Portugese relationship and its progress and development is critical for the future of our ties with this ally.

My letter to AID of September 29, 1987, and AID's reply of December 17, 1987, follows:

COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1987.

MR. JAY MORRIS,
Acting Administrator, Agency for International Development,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: As the fiscal year ends, I would like a report on the Luso-American Development Foundation which now has been in operation for over two years.

I would like to know what level of capitalization the Foundation has reached, what funds have been spent on projects, how much has been obligated and how much has been expended. Please also send a recent financial statement of the Foundation including a breakdown of the budget and the projects for which funding has been committed. Your evaluation of the Foundation's progress in fulfilling its mandate as well as an outline of its short, medium and long-term strategy would also be useful.

In addition, I would like to know in general terms the process for review of proposals submitted to the Foundation for funding, the types of requests by general subject and category, the length of the review process, the criteria used in approval or denial and what communication during the review process there is with those submitting proposals.

I appreciate your consideration of these questions and believe that this material can be helpful in the expected review process of our assistance programs which are to occur in the coming months.

I look forward to hearing from you.

With best regards.

Sincerely yours,
LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

U.S. INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT
COOPERATION AGENCY, AGENCY
FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT,
Washington, DC, December 17, 1987.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter requesting information on the Luso-American Development Foundation (LADF). I regret the delay in our response. It was necessary to solicit assistance from the Embassy/A.I.D. in Portugal.

At the outset one should understand that the Government of Portugal (GOP) funds the Foundation's endowment. The Foundation is a privately chartered Portuguese institution under Portuguese law. To date, funds used by the GOP to make contributions to this institution have been derived from cash transfer grants provided under the A.I.D. program. Both the USG and the GOP are extremely careful about ensuring the sovereignty and independence of this Portuguese institution. Thus, A.I.D. is not directly involved with the management of the Foundation, but does monitor its development. The American Ambassador to Portugal is a member of LADF's Directive Council.

While the Luso-American Development Foundation is an independent private organization, I would note that its activities benefit U.S. interests by seeking to advance Portuguese economic and social development through linkage and cooperation between Portugal and the United States in the scientific cultural, educational, commercial and entrepreneurial fields. To further these goals, leading U.S. companies have joined the New York-based Luso American Business Council which assists LADF in promoting joint ventures, investments and trade between the two countries.

We are enclosing a report on LADF provided by USAID-Lisbon. From this report and other information available from USAID-Lisbon, we have endeavored to address your questions.

LEVEL OF CAPITALIZATION

As stated in the enclosed report, LADF had received, as of September 30, 1987, approximately $99 million from the GOP. The value of the Foundation's endowment increased by $13.8 million through earnings and appreciation of its portfolio through August 31, 1987, thereby totalling $112.8 million. Approximately $14 million has been disbursed, of which some $10.8 million has been provided for projects and the remainder for Foundation costs.

PROJECT OBLIGATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

The Foundation has received a total of 1021 requests for financial support as of September 30, 1987. LADF has approved 346 projects valued at approximately $21.3 million and disbursed some $10.8 million for project activities. The Foundation has greatly accelerated its activities in CY 87. While only 492 requests were received and 138 projects approved during the first 18 months between June 1985 and December 1986, 529 were received and 211 approved in the past nine months.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

An independent audit was conducted by the accounting firm Price-Waterhouse in April 1987. Although a summary was to be included in the Foundation's first annual report, the preparation of the annual report has regrettably been delayed. It should be published by late January and will be forwarded to you when it is received. The 1987 annual report is expected by June 1988.

TYPES OF REQUESTS

The types of requests generally submitted to the Foundation for support can be categorized in the following areas of emphasis: Private Sector Development, Science and Technology, Education, Public Administration and Regional Development and Culture. We understand that priority is initially being given to the first three program areas.

PROJECT REVIEW PROCEDURE

The project review process is an internal Foundation matter and obviously varies according to the complexity, magnitude and subject matter of the request. We understand the Foundation keeps all applicants appropriately informed during the two to six month proposal processing period. A.I.D. has reviewed and found acceptable the procedures outlined in the Foundation's documents.

CRITERIA USED FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

The criteria for project approval are clearly outlined in Foundation documents as the following:

Projects should make a signficant contribution to Portugal's economic development. Projects should be realistic, with clearly defined objectives which are included within the Foundation's areas of emphasis.

The Foundation will support projects which contain innovative approaches, giving priority to projects involving cooperation among Portuguese organizations or collaboration between Portuguese and American institutions. Portuguese institutions will normally be responsible for the administration of projects.

Support for a project normally will not exceed three years.

The Foundation generally will not finance more than 50% of the costs of a project, except for some research activities.

In the field of private sector development, the Foundation will give preference to financing projects through financial intermediaries, trade associations, and cooperatives, etc.

Financing of equipment, training seminars and conferences, etc., normally will be considered only when part of a comprehensive project.

The Foundation will not support current operating costs, charitable activities, or building construction.

The Foundation will not support partisan political activities.

FOLLOWUP

Consideration is being given by the Foundation to the holding of a seminar to focus upon various models to obtain insights for future assistance relationships with advanced developing countries. Such a seminar should provide a useful opportunity to comment appropriately on the Foundation's mandate and on its short, medium and long-term strategy.

We appreciate your interest in the Luso-American Development Foundation's activities. Annual reports and current audits will be available shortly which will provide further information about LADF activities, management and finances. We will ensure that copies of those documents are forwarded to you. If we can be of any further assistance please let us know.

Sincerely,

JAY F. MORRIS.

Enclosure.

USAID LISBON REPORT ON THE LUSO-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

PROJECT REQUESTS

As of September 1987, the Foundation had received 1021 requests, as compared with 492 at the end of December 1986. Thus, the Foundation received more requests in the past nine months than it received in the 18 month period from its beginning in June 1985 through December 1986. This is evidence that existence of the Foundation is widely known throughout Portugal and that demand for Foundation assistance continues to grow.

APPROVALS

As of September 30, 1987, the Foundation had approved 346 projects with a total value of $21.4 million, at the then current escudo exchange rate of 142.95 to $1.00 (it should be noted that Foundation projects are expressed in escudos, so the dollar value of approvals and disbursements will be affected somewhat by changes in exchange rates). The 211 projects approved in the first nine months of 1987 represent 1½ times the number of projects approved during the first 18 months of operation.

LADF's goal of committing 75 percent of its funds to the three areas of major emphasis—private sector development, education and science and technology—is being exceeded as shown by the following table:

	No. of projects received	No. of projects approved	Value of approved projects in dollars	Percent of total value
Private sector	196	45	6,634,864	31
Education	260	86	4,275,276	20
Science and technology	247	115	6,085,084	28
Public administration and regional development	101	36	3,408,856	16
Culture	190	60	856,457	5
Others	27	4	33,967
Totals	1,021	346	21,294,504	100

The Foundation continues to receive large numbers of requests for small-scale activities. Of 349 approved projects, 151 were for short-term training, visits, workshops, etc. These amounted to 43.2 percent of the number of projects approved, but only 3.2 percent of funds committed. There has been a tendency for the Foundation's small professional staff and the Executive Council to be submerged by such requests. The Foundation recently took steps to streamline consideration of these proposals.

In order to further illustrate the areas of involvement, the following list of projects approved in each of the five fields supported by the Foundation are outlined below:

	Dollars
Private sector:
Risk capital societies	419,727
Loan fund for young entrepreneurs	629,591
Exponer—exposition fair	1,836,306
Education:
School of Biotechnology/UC Porto	1,322,141
Master's Program in animal product	237,845
Food Technology Program	310,948
Science and technology:
Control of Japanese beetle	198,531
Control of forest fires	1,049,318
Freezing of fruits and vegetables	304,912
Public administration and regional development:
Agricultural policy and technology in Northwestern Portugal	281,504
Merec—Municipal management	486,464
Azores—geothermal energy	448,066
Culture:
Cutileiro Design Center	34,977
Wilson Center Conference on Portugal	50,535
V. Da Motta International Piano Contest	104,932

As of September 30, the Foundation had received $99,195,000 from the Government of Portugal which, in turn, received cash transfers in this amount from the Economic Support Fund. This amounted to $18.8 million less than was originally anticipated, because of budget reductions pursuant to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation. The value of the Foundation's endowment had increased $13.8 million through earnings and appreciation in the value of their portfolios through August 31, 1986.

The total $112.9 million is being managed by both foreign and Portuguese financial institutions. Because of continued devaluation of the dollar and the excellent performance of the Portuguese economy over the past years, the Foundation's operational plan called for 30-35 percent of its endowment to be kept in Portugal by the end of 1987.

It should be noted that most of the Foundation's expenditures are in escudos. As of the end of September, 28.5 percent of the Foundation's endowment and earnings was being managed by Portuguese financial institutions.

During this initial period, the Foundation had pursued a policy of dividing its investment funds among five major non-Portuguese banks (Riggs, Manufacturer's Hanover, Citibank, Chase and Barclays), with the intention of evaluating results and shifting funds to the best performers. Similarly, the Foundation is judging the results achieved by major Portuguese banks and investment groups which have been handling the Foundation's escudo accounts.

As mentioned earlier, the Portuguese economy has been strong and the stock market particularly ebullient. Early in October the Foundation (either lucky or prescient) decided to sell some of its shares.

It sold for 502.6 million escudos a number of shares, which had been acquired by local financial institutions over the past year at a cost of 139.7 million escudos. Thus, the Foundation realized a profit of over 2.5 times the purchase price of these shares. It should be pointed out that these were not speculative investments—but increases in the Portuguese stock market over the value have been astronomical—at least until the current correction.

While LADF invests its escudo funds primarily to achieve earnings and appreciation of capital, it also favors investment of firms which will contribute significantly to Portugal's economic growth. For example, it owns shares in an investment bank, leasing companies, and companies developing Portugal's money markets.

The Foundation continues to have a high rate of disbursements to project approvals, particularly when one considers that some projects will disburse over 3 or more years. As of September 30, $10.8 million had been disbursed of $21.4 million in approved projects—i.e., project disbursements amounted to slightly over 50 percent of projects approved.

Of 306 major projects approved three or more months previously, only 18 had no disbursements. Thus, it appears that projects supported by the Foundation are ready for prompt implementation.

The full-time staff of the Foundation increased from 22 on December 31, 1986 to 25 on September 30, 1987. The increase consisted of two secretaries and a receptionist/telephone operator. Even with extensive use of computers, increase in the workload and inadequacies of Lisbon's telephone system necessitated these additions. When the Foundation moves to its permanent quarters (in approximately one year) some additions to staff—particularly assistant program directors—are likely to occur.

Operating costs (administration and personnel expenses) remained low, amounting to 8.5 percent of the value of approved projects. While these costs have increased somewhat over earlier figures, they are still quite low compared to similar organizations.

The first phase of construction of the Foundation's permanent quarters should be completed by the end of 1987, and the second and final phase is scheduled to be completed in May or June of 1988.

Joint meetings of the Directive and Executive Councils continue to take place approximately once a month, while the Executive Council meets on an average of once per week. Meetings of the five members of the Advisory Council resident in Portugal take place about every two months. However, the American members of the Advisory Council have not met. Portuguese members of the Advisory Council have participated in evaluations of projects financed by the Foundation. The appropriate role of the Advisory Council has not yet been fully defined.

Price-Waterhouse completed its audit of the Foundation in April 1987 and had no negative finding. Weaknesses identified in a preliminary audit had been corrected by the time the final audit was conducted. A summary of the audit will be included in the first annual report. Unfortunately, it has taken a very long time to prepare a final version of the first annual report, due out soon. The annual report for 1987 should be published by June 1988. In addition, a copy of the Price-Waterhouse Report on examination of the financial statements as of December 31, 1986 is available from USAID/Lisbon.

The Foundation has a wide variety of financial administration internal reports to ensure that current information is available to the Directive and Executive Councils.

REPORT ISSUED ON RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION IN NORTHERN IRELAND

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, as the prime sponsor of H.R. 722, the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act, I would like to inform my colleagues of a recent report released by the British Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights. This Commission was established by Parliament for the purpose of advising the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on the adequacy and effectiveness of the law in preventing discrimination on the ground of religious belief or political affiliation, and providing redress for those who have been discriminated against.

I recently met with the Honorable Kevin McNamara, Member of Parliament, the Labor Party spokesman on Northern Ireland in Parliament. He expressed his strong support for the Commission's report, entitled "Religious and Political Discrimination and Equality of Opportunity in Northern Ireland," and urged the support of the Congress. In many ways, this report goes further than the MacBride Principles. It calls for all companies in Northern Ireland, not just United States entities, to adhere to fair employment guidelines. We now await the official response by the British Government, to be issued in the form of a government white paper.

This should not suggest that the MacBride campaign is over. Efforts to promote the MacBride principles in the United States, specifically H.R. 722, have assured that the issue of religious discrimination is addressed by the British Parliament. Support should be given in tandem to my bill and the Commission's recommendations to Parliament, if the employment practices in this region are to be corrected.

A summary of the Commission's recommendations can be obtained from the Ad Hoc Committee on Irish Affairs, Room 2428, Rayburn House Office Building.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT OF 1987

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in restrained support of the recently passed Agricultural Credit Act of 1987.

Over 5 years of plummeting farm income and land values have wreaked havoc on the entire agricultural sector. The dire result has impacted not only the farmers themselves, but also the creditors on whom they rely.

Farm Credit Services [FCS] accounts for over one-third of all farm loans made in this country. The system's financial health has been severely impaired over the past few years as the financial health of America's agricultural sector has steadily deteriorated. FCS losses since 1985 alone total $4.8 billion. Further it is estimated that of the entire system's loan portfolio of $51 billion, nearly one-fourth falls into the high risk category of "questionable loans."

Without Government assistance, it is estimated that 11 of the 37 institution banks would have faced insolvency within a year. If this were allowed to occur the consequences would be ruinous. Entire stockholder investments would be irrevocably lost. Most likely, however, it would exacerbate the problem of capital flight from system institutions as stockholders scramble to retrieve their hard-earned money. Further, the reverberations would extend beyond the immediate stockholders, throughout the agricultural sector. Needed credit would become more scarce. thereby driving up the cost of credit to other borrowers.

Indeed, this is a distressing scenario. And one which isn't all that far from the current state of affairs. That something needed to be done is not the question. Rather the question centers on what form the assistance is to take place. It is here that opinions diverge.

Last year Congress passed legislation intended to help the ailing FCS. The legislation allowed FCS banks to extend their losses over 20 years. This is contrary to general accepted accounting rules. This rule was not only bad policy, it was a Band-Aid approach to a very severe problem.

The final farm credit assistance package passed Congress on Friday, December 18. This legislation, although not perfect, was a vast improvement over the original bill—H.R. 3030—passed by Congress earlier this summer. I was compelled to vote against that bill for several reasons.

Specifically, I had trouble with the inclusion of a secondary market. I do not think that the inclusion of a secondary market will help those most in need of assistance, the financially strapped farmer who isn't able to obtain needed credit for operation. I also had trouble with the method by which the House version proposed to help the ailing FCS. They proposed selling off Government assets and if needed, a direct Treasury infusion. Finally, I had trouble with the House version on restructuring. The House bill was much more strict in its requirement of restructuring FCS institutions. In some instances, the merger of district institutions was made mandatory, without the requirement of stockholder votes.

On Friday, December 18, Congress passed the conference report on H.R. 3030 by an overwhelming margin. I was among those who voted for the conference report. Although the legislation still contained the inclusion of the secondary market, it did adopt strict reporting and underwriting standards. Further, the bill adopted almost entirely, the Senate language on financing the FCS assistance. This language, in contrast to the House version, stipulates that the assistance will be provided by selling 15-year bonds. The interest on these bonds will be born by the Government the first 5 years, shared with FCS institutions the second 5, and born entirely by FCS institutions the last 5 years.

In conclusion, the vast improvement of the conference report over the original House version, coupled with the urgency of passing some form of assistance, obliged me to vote in favor of this legislation.

LEGAL JUSTICE SYSTEM IN NORTHERN IRELAND CRITICIZED BY KEY NEW YORK BAR ASSOCIATION

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as chairman of the 188 member bipartisan ad hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues an important new study on the oft criticized legal justice system in Northern Ireland today.

The study was conducted by the City Bar Association of New York. Specifically its Committee on International Human Rights completed a 120-page study to fulfill its mission to study nations with troubled human rights records.

The study made a number of conclusions and recommendations. They indicated that there were too many juryless trials in Northern Ireland and they found a "compelling need" for the British to curtail the use of these in cases involving terrorism charges. At the center of this study are the so-called diplock courts which have been operating in Northern Ireland for most of the past two decades. These were established as emergency courts to help implement the emergency legislation to combat terrorism enacted in the early 1970's. They have continued and as time has gone along they have become even more repressive than when they began.

The bar association study calls for the introduction of three judge panels for cases where trials without a jury cannot be avoided. It calls for the elimination of the current stringent evidence standards for defendants who complain of coerced confessions.

I wish to commend the bar association and especially those directly responsible for this study, International Committee Chairman Alice H. Henkin, William E. Hellerstein, Robert B. McKay, and Peter R. Schlam. It is an important study described by the highly respected Irish Echo newspaper as—

> One of the most thorough attempts by American Human rights lawyers to offer a critique of the courts of Northern Ireland based on international standards of justice.

There are several past and present policy considerations that bear directly on this study and the topic it focuses on. The first is the recently passed Extradition Treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. At the center of the controversy which surrounded this treaty and which led to a delay in its ratification, was the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland to which an individual would be extradited. The concerns related to the absence of due process in the system. This study confirms many of the worst concerns expressed by opponents and it is imperative that this study be given very serious consideration and serve as the basis for monitoring of the justice system in Northern Ireland by those with a concern for human, civil, and legal rights.

A second policy concern must be the issue of continued United States economic aid to Ireland and Northern Ireland. We are nearing a decision on whether to extend this aid beyond the current fiscal year. The House has already voted to extend it through fiscal year 1989 at the current $35 million level. However it is important to note that there are critical conditions associated with this legislation including the President having to certify to Congress each year that the aid is furthering the cause of human rights in Northern Ireland. It would seem to be that reforms in the legal justice system in Northern Ireland must be central to any certification now and in the future with respect to economic aid.

I wish to enclose in the RECORD a newspaper article from the Irish Echo discussing the city bar association study. As well as one from the New York Times.

CITY BAR ASSN. CRITICAL OF COURT SYSTEM IN N.I.

The City Bar Association of New York in a study released last week was highly critical of the legal justice system in Northern Ireland. The study said there were too many juryless trials and found a "compelling need" for the British to curtail the use of these in cases involving terrorism charges.

The study by the association's committee on international human rights recommended the introduction of three-judge panels for cases where trials without a jury cannot be avoided. It also proposed elimination of the current stringent evidence standards—harsher than those in other British courts—for defendants who complain of coerced confessions.

The inquiry into the Northern Ireland justice system was carried out by three members of the bar association, William E. Hellerstein, Robert B. McKay and Peter R. Schlam and the international committee's chairwoman, Alice H. Henkin. It was undertaken as part of the panel's role of sending study missions to nations with troubled human rights records.

The 120-page study is one of the more thorough attempts by American human rights lawyers to offer a critique of the courts of Northern Ireland based on international standards of justice.

It centered on the so-called Diplock Courts, in which one judge sits with no jury. This system has been criticized by lawyers and judges from several nations.

Recently, the Republic of Ireland has been pressing for changes in the system. However, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has rejected the Dublin proposals.

Nationalist leaders on both sides of the border say Catholics cannot get a fair trial under the Diplock Court system. But, Mrs. Thatcher maintains that the severe measures are still needed because of continuing terrorist violence.

The report, based on a three-member study and visit earlier this year, found that the system, in which a single jurist serves as both judge and jury, "does conform to the requirements of the international standards on fair trial," even though it departs from "the standard norms of British justice."

The panel concludes, however, that various questionable conditions leave the British Government with an obligation to make substantial changes "with greater intensity, imagination and, indeed, courage, than it ever has."

In their study, the New York lawyers criticized the potential for reintroduction of the interment arrests without due process and the reliance in many one-judge trials on challenged confessions or uncoroborated informers which are more easily admitted as evidence than is normal under accepted common law.

Instead, the committee urged that the reliance on juryless trials for politically tinged cases be "greatly reduced" by narrowing the standing list of offenses now automatically requiring Diplock judges.

Many lawyers have complained that the Diplock authority has been unfairly used as a sweeping measure to deny non-political defendants trial by jury.

The bar association panel found that "terrorist activity still abounds" in a serious enough degree to justify some juryless trials. But the authorities were urged to replace the single-judge system with three-judge panels who would be required to produce a unanimous verdict for a conviction.

The study noted that the Republic of Ireland also uses juryless trials for charges of political violence, but these are before three-judge panels. Using the same type of tribunal would carry "great symbolic significance" for the nationalist Catholics of the North, the study said.

ULSTER JURY URGED BY NEW YORK BAR—STUDY FINDS COMPELLING NEED FOR PROVINCE TO USE PANEL IN CASES OF TERRORISM

(By Francis X. Clines)

LONDON, Dec. 8.—A study of Northern Ireland justice by the City Bar Association of New York has concluded there is a "compelling need" for the British authorities to curtail the use of trials without juries in cases involving terrorism charges.

The inquiry by association's committee on international human rights recommended the introduction of three-judge panels for cases where trials without a jury cannot be avoided. It also proposed elimination of the current stringent evidence standards—harsher than those in other British courts—for defendants who complain of coerced confessions.

The report, based on a three-member study and visit earlier this year, found that the system, in which a single jurist serves as both judge and jury, "does conform to the requirements of the international standards on fair trial," even though it departs from "the standard norms of British justice."

The panel concludes, however, that various questionable conditions leave the British Government with an obligation to make substantial changes "with greater intensity, imagination and indeed, courage, than it ever has.

STUDY BY 3 MEMBERS

The study was carried out by three members of the bar association, William E. Hellerstein, Robert B. McKay and Peter R. Schlam and the international committee's chairwoman, Alice H. Henkin, as part of the panel's role of sending study missions to nations with troubled human rights records.

The 120-page study was one of the more thorough attempts by American human rights lawyers to offer a critique of the courts of the embattled province based on international standards of justice.

It comes at a time of renewed controversy over the so-called Diplock system, which is named for the peer who recommended the severe court procedures at the height of paramilitary violence in 1972 when the jury system was considered dubious because of terrorist threat and sectarian prejudice.

Lately, the Irish Republic, which borders province, has been unsuccessfully urging changes in the judicial system, echoing the long standing complaint that members of the nationalist Catholic minority in Northern Ireland cannot obtain fair trials. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher so far has rejected such changes, maintaining that the severe measures are still needed because of continuing terrorist violence.

ON INTERNMENT ARRESTS

In particular, the bar association study criticized the potential for reintroduction of internment arrests without due process and the reliance in many one-judge trials on challenged confessions, which are more easily admitted as evidence than is normal under accepted common law.

Instead, the panel urged that the reliance on juryless trials for politically tinged cases be "greatly reduced" by narrowing the standing list of offenses now automatically requiring Diplock judges.

Defense lawyers have long complained that the Diplock authority has been unfairly used as a sweeping measure to deny nonpolitical defendants trial by jury. The bar association committee, warning that emergency measures can become permanently institutionalized, urged that the state Attorney General assume an affirmative obligation to justify in each case the need for trial without jury.

The bar committee found that "terrorist activity still abounds" in a serious enough degree to justify some juryless trials. But the authorities were urged to replace the single-judge system with three-judge panels who would be required to produce a unanimous verdict for a conviction.

In addition, the study recommended the elimination of the standing power of "extrajudicial detention"—police internment without due process—that British authorities retain but last used in 1972 for sweeping roundups of suspected activists in the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The association study noted that the Irish Republic also uses juryless trials for charges of political violence, but these are before three-judge panels. Using the same collegial tribunal would carry "great symbolic significance" for the nationalist Catholics of the North, the study contends. The Thatcher Government has previously rejected this proposal.

AN EXAMPLE OF THE CREATIVITY OF UNIONS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, in a burst of wishful thinking, some people would like to believe that labor unions are about to pass from the American scene. Some unions have had rough times recently, because of international economic trends primarily, but the importance of responsible union activity has never been more clear to those who are familiar with the facts. Labor unions provide for working men and women a wide and indispensible variety of services and support. And those who do not participate in the labor movement aren't always familiar with how broad that range can be.

One of the most innovative and important unions in America is the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, the result of a merger between two important unions, and one which has worked very hard to represent the legitimate interests of its workers while cooperating with the industries in which its workers are employed. One example of the creativity of the Amalgamated is the Amalgamated Bank. An article last week in the Wall Street Journal gives a good idea of the role that the bank plays, and it is important not only for what it says about this particular institution, but for the example it gives of the continued vibrancy of labor unions in America today.

I ask that the article be printed here.

The article follows:

Labor Lending: How a Union Survives In Banking by Pushing Services Over Profits—Amalgamated Bank Pitches Free Checking and Shuns Risk, Then Needles Rivals, Slow Dance in the Conga Line

(By Robert L. Rise)

New York.—When Amalgamated Bank of New York introduced a free checking account last fall, it wasn't content to quietly inform its customers. The bank bought an ad opposite the editorial page in the New York Times and asked: "Why is free checking only for those who can afford to pay for it?"

The bank's inclination to tweak its big corporate rivals isn't surprising. Amalgamated is a union bank, founded in 1923 by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and still owned by the 284,000 members of its successor, the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers.

Heralded as the wave of the future by labor leaders earlier in the century, labor banking was a flop. Out of some 36 labor banks founded in the 1920s, only Amalgamated in New York and Brotherhood Bank & Trust in Kansas City, Kan., survive as labor-owned institutions.

Now, with some labor experts predicting a comeback in union membership and influence, Amalgamated provides one of the oldest examples of a kind of labor-owned business that may multiply. In the past several years, about half a dozen new labor banks have opened, and more are on the way. Like the clothing workers who started Amalgamated, other unions see a chance to own a bank friendly to their members' needs and find new investment outlets for their growing assets.

A ROGUE BANK

Amalgamated survived largely because its union owner insisted on conservative banking and professional management. In contrast, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers set up banks across the country during the 1920s and quickly branched into securities and even Florida land development. Losses piled up, and the union eventually charged four of its officers with mishandling funds. By 1931, the engineers were out of the banking business.

Amalgamated has also benefited from being something of a rogue bank, loudly touting a consumer ethic and often de-emphasizing profits in favor of services. Its free checking account is only the latest evidence: Amalgamated claims to have pioneered the unsecured installment loan in the 1920s, lending money to borrowers with no collateral but a steady job. Three times a survey has named it the top bank for consumers in New York City. "They give me the best treatment," says Mike Garcia, an officer of the Leather Goods, Plastic and Novelty Workers' Union, who says he banks at Amalgamated because of its labor roots.

OVERLAPPING CONSTITUENCIES

Amalgamated has reported 44 consecutive years of profit and has grown to $1.47 billion in assets by serving two overlapping constituencies: middle-class consumers and organized labor. Now, the union-owned bank is exploring other ways to use its labor ties and financial muscle to expand in new areas.

Earlier this year, Amalgamated teamed up with Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in a proposal to offer a comprehensive money-management program for the AFL–CIO's 14.5 million members. On a smaller but no less innovative scale, Amalgamated is helping three New York locals of the Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers union use some of their pension money to finance below-market, no-points home mortgages for their members. The bank is considering expanding the service to other unions, many of which have retirement trust funds under Amalgamated's care.

The recent mini-resurgence of labor banking is led by unions in the construction trades. Massachusetts members of the carpenters' union opened a Boston bank in September, and California carpenters plan to open a separate institution next year. Two-year-old Union Savings Bank in Albuquerque, N.M., another construction-trades bank, uses its $10 million in assets for loans to small businesses and other customers.

"I think there's been a realization that we should be generating jobs with our own money wherever possible," says Anthony Ramos, the retired former leader of the California State Council of Carpenters.

Amalgamated's loud voice on consumer issues is partly a marketing ploy to set itself apart from the pack. As other banks cater to big depositors and raise fees for small accounts, Amalgamated promotes treats for the little guy, such as its free checking and low-interest personal loans.

Highly conscious of its labor roots, Amalgamated also likes to take shots at the establishment banks. In one of its radio commercials, a stuffy banker tells a customer he needs a password to sit down, "The name of any Ivy League school will do," says the banker. "P.S. 188?" asks the customer, naming the public school he attended. In other ads, comedians Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara imitate rank-and-filers with names like Rocco and Blanche, and pitch "America's Labor Bank."

"If we give [the industry] an uncomfortable feeling for a couple of hours, it will be worth it," concludes Edward M. Katz, Amalgamated's president and chief executive.

The bank's five-story brick headquarters, which it shares with its union owner, overlooks New York's Union Square, the site of labor and political rallies earlier in the century. Back in the old days, Amalgamated's services even included a travel agency and foreign-exchange desk for the immigrant population that dominated the clothing workers' union. Today, customers in open shirts and work boots outnumber those in business suits. Proclaims a plaque on the lobby wall: "New York's First Labor Bank, dedicated to the service and advancement of the labor movement."

Mr. Katz, too, is quick to prove his allegiance. After ushering a visitor into his office, he flips open his suit jacket and proudly shows the union label. A soft-spoken man of 66 who started as a part-timer at the bank in 1946, Mr. Katz raises his voice when he talks about how small depositors have fared under banking deregulation. Not too well, he believes. "When you have a special industry using Uncle Sam as an umbrella in times of difficulty, don't you owe something to the public?" he asks. "What would be so wrong with having an account on which you don't make money?"

Amalgamated, though, is bucking a strong trend. A national survey conducted by the Consumer Federation of America and others found that fees for routine banking services are rising sharply for most depositors.

In some ways, Amalgamated has a lot less to offer those customers than its competitors. Small by big-bank standards, it doesn't generally offer credit cards or home mortgages. With only three branches and two newly opened automated teller machines, it lacks what many consumers want most: convenience. And in the ranks of big-league banks, Amalgamated is an also-ran, shunning such trends as interstate expansion and the hot competition for corporate loans.

"I'm not conscious of their presence" as a competitor, says Richard Ravitch, the chairman and chief executive of Bowery Savings Bank, which has about four times the assets and eight times the branches of Amalgamated. Contends another New York banking official: "If they were the best, they'd be bigger."

But what Amalgamated does have, it pushes hard, especially its reputation as a low-cost consumer bank. Last year, when an annual survey by New York State Sen. Franz S. Leichter dropped Amalgamated to No. 11 from No. 1 as the least expensive bank for New York City consumers, Amalgamated officials phoned the legislator and angrily complained. (The bank is back up to No. 2 this year.) In 1985, the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan New York challenged Amalgamated's boast of having the lowest auto-loan rates of any bank in the city. But the bank quickly backed up the claim, the bureau says.

Amalgamated says its current 9.2% interest rate on new auto loans is still the best in the city. According to the Bank Rate Monitor, seven of the largest bank and thrift institutions in the New York City area charge an average of nearly 12.5%. On the deposit side, the bank's 6.25% annual yield on money-market accounts is a third of a point higher than the average paid by 10 big institutions tracked by the monitor.

Amalgamated also pays interest and charges no fees on savings accounts with a $5 minimum. And it is not unusual for the bank to get thank-you notes from longtime customers surprised to find the bank honored their checks—and charged no penalty—on their overdrawn accounts.

Customers' main complaint centers on what bank employees call "the conga line" that often slowly snakes its way to 23 tellers in the lobby of the main office. Still, other factors outweigh the long waits, depositors say. Edward Soorko, for example, says he moved his account to Amalgamated after Citibank bounced a check for his son's tuition—even though he covered the check with a deposit the same day.

Charles Nabelle, a dapper 82-year-old customer in a white hat and sports coat, walks 13 blocks to get to Amalgamated's Union Square office. There are plenty of closer banks, but he says he chose Amalgamated because he likes the personal attention he gets there. After cashing a $40 check, Mr. Nabelle offers a short lecture on the importance of shopping for bank services. "A poor sucker will go for Chase Manhattan as opposed to Amalgamated because Chase or Citibank is an important bank," he says. "That is unfortunate."

And perhaps costly. Sen. Leichter's latest survey found that a typical bank customer with $600 in checking and $1,000 in savings would earn $105 in a year at Amalgamated and lose $100 at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. Amalgamated, says Glenn von Nostitz, the legislative aide who oversees the survey, shows "you can give people a break and still make money."

Not surprisingly, Amalgamated has kept a close relationship with organized labor. Unions account for up to two-thirds of its $1.1 billion in deposits, and its trust department holds an additional $3.2 billion in pension and health-and-welfare funds. Amalgamated manages $1.6 billion of the trust funds, shunning stocks and corporate bonds in favor of safer government securities.

In 1973, Amalgamated officials worked over a weekend to fill out hundreds of bail checks to keep striking Philadelphia teachers out of jail. Nine years later, when the National Football League Players Association ran out of money during its strike, it turned to Amalgamated for a $200,000 loan. The player's union didn't have an account with the bank at the time, but "we did after that," says Ed Garvey, then the Union's executive director.

Although neither the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers union or the bank likes to admit it, the goal of giving consumers and unions a break often conflicts with the goal of making money. But Mr. Katz has the luxury of working for owners who aren't constantly pressing for higher profits. "You make a little less," concedes Jack Sheinkman, the president of the union and chairman of the bank. "Despite that, we've done very well in terms of our return on equity and on capital," which exceed the average for banks Amalgamated's size.

That attitude makes it easier for the bankers to concentrate on another priority of the union—financial safety. The bank has few corporate customers and, as a matter of policy, turns down offers to participate with other banks in corporate lending. "I don't want to rely on my big brothers" to determine if a loan is safe, says Mr. Katz. Nor does he like to gamble on investments. Mr. Katz prefers buying U.S. government securities, and the shorter the maturity the better. "All the money's tied up in cash," jokes Howard Lee, the executive vice president and cashier.

The result is steady, if not spectacular, profits. Last year, Amalgamated earned $12.2 million, sending $7 million of that in dividends to its union owners. Government bank examiners often do double takes when they pore over Amalgamated's books. Bad loans charged off in 1986: $195,000 out of $313.5 million, far below the average for banks its size. Auto loans delinquent 30 days or more at the end of November: 11 out of 13,044.

Says William A. Goldberg, who runs the bank's personal-loan department: "We're here for the average guy—so long as we are reasonably assured he'll pay us back."

SUPERCONDUCTING SUPER COLLIDER: CALIFORNIA'S EFFORT UNITED FOR SUCCESS

HON. ERNEST L. KONNYU

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. KONNYU. Mr. Speaker, as the old expression goes, good news travels fast but bad news travels even faster and lingers much longer. I am taking this opportunity to correct some of the bad news and incorrect information surrounding the siting of superconducting super collider [SSC] in the Golden State of California.

In spite of some statements to the contrary, locating the SSC in California is strongly supported by the vast majority of Californians. A recent independent survey indicated that over 68 percent of the respondents to the poll of northern Californians supported locating the facility in California. Also, the entire congressional delegation as well as the State legislature and the Governor of California are united in their efforts to do all they can to ensure California is the site for the SSC.

Both sites in the State of California, the one in Yolo and Solano Counties, northwest of Sacramento, or the other which is in the Central Valley south of Sacramento in San Joaquin and Stanislaus Counties, exceed the technical requirements for the site location of the SSC. There is more than sufficient water and energy for the project at these locations. Our greatest asset in my opinion, is the intellectual capabilities of the scientists, technicians, and academicians who are presently working at the University of California at Berkeley, Stanford University, the University of California at Davis, and the University of the Pacific. These individuals are among the best in the world and their presence close to the SSC is an invaluable plus for locating the SSC in California.

Furthermore, our State is willing to make a substantial contribution to help defray the overall costs of the superconducting super collider.

Mr. Speaker, all factors considered, the State of California will be the best location for the SSC because it fulfills all the technical requirements, but more importantly, it has unsurpassed human resources to really make this project work for our Nation.

EDITOR'S 2¢ WORTH

HON. ED JONES

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the end of any year generally brings with it a series of stories and commentaries in the media that evaluate the things that have gone on throughout the preceding 12 months. True to form, such stories and pictorial revisiting of the events of 1987 have already begun emerging in the media.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues a similar musing put together by my friend Mr. Bob Parkins, the editor of the Milan Mirror-Exchange of Milan, TN. In providing editorial comments about the recent riots of Cuban inmates at United States prisons, Mr. Parkins made what I think is a key point: that no where else in the world do we see people risking their lives to prevent being sent back to a nation ruled by a Communist regime.

In making that point, Mr. Parkins vividly provides all Americans another reason to be thankful for the great freedom we enjoy both collectively and individually. I hope that my colleagues will take time to read this editorial which I am requesting be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

EDITOR'S 2¢ WORTH

(By Bob Parkins)

Where else but America?

That phrase often pops up, and it is usually appropriate verbage.

Milanite Jim Cutlip brought out an interesting point on the subject last week, while we were discussing the Cuban rioting in U.S. prisons.

Where else in the world would inmates risk their lives to prevent being sent back to a Communist stronghold?", he asked.

That is an interesting comment and a significant truth.

Most folks risk their lives to get out of a country . . . instead of remaining there. Ever heard of prisoners in Russia, protesting to stay in the Soviet Union? Or Jews in Lenin-Land demonstrating to stay there . . . Or East Germans revolting to stay behind the Communist Berlin Wall?

Never!

With all of the world spotlight on the Reagan-Gorbachev summit talks, President Reagan would do well to remember the human rights issue.

Keeping citizens imprisoned behind brick walls and barbed wire without permission to leave, says a lot about a nation's freedom policy. While visiting the Soviet Union many years ago, we Americans found it a lot more difficult to get out of Russia than enter it. We'll never forget the anxiety of going through 'Checkpoint Charlie' at the 'Wall' from east to west Berlin. Armed guards, stone-faced, studied the photos on our passports at length—glancing up and down from the photos to our faces—before finally waving us on. It was a relief to cross over from bondage to freedom.

Conversely, in America, there are no "Walls," to keep people from going wherever they please. Americans are allowed to protest at will on any issue—from gay rights to nuclear bans—without retribution.

Had the Cuban riots happened in Russia, (which happened in America) the riots wouldn't have lasted a day. Protestors not shot would have been beaten to death.

Only in America could such freedom prevail.

But too often, freedoms are abused rather than being counted as a blessing.

INDICATIONS OF STRONG SUPPORT FOR THE SSC IN CALIFORNIA

HON. JERRY LEWIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, recently, I was visited by members of a delegation of interested Californians who came to Washington to express their support for the superconducting super collider. This delegation, which numbered over 60, was made of people from all walks of life. They live in the two areas of California—near Stockton and the Yolo and Solano Counties—where the SSC would be sited. None of the delegation would receive a direct benefit if the SSC was built in California. In fact, several of the farmers would lose part of their land if the collider was built. But these people believe in the SSC and they traveled to Washington on their own to convey their views.

Their message was simple: The people of California overwhelmingly support the superconducting super collider and want to see it built in their State. While there has been some opposition expressed to the SSC in California, a far greater number of people stronger favor the collider. More importantly, the supporters are deeply committed as demonstrated by their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, the SSC is the next stage of development of high energy physics. It is impossible to anticipate all the benefits we will derive from the knowledge we will obtain through its operation. Unquestionably, the SSC will require some sacrifices. It is expensive, at a time of limited budgets. There are uncertainties involved. However, the greatest burden will be borne by those who will live in the immediate vicinity of the actual site. Those people will lose some of their land and their rural lifestyle. But the great majority of the people from Yolo, Solano, and Stockton are willing to bear that burden. For this reason, among others, I believe the State of California should be the home for the SSC.

A TRIBUTE TO MERRILL JACK EDWARDS

HON. JIM JONTZ

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, Merrill Jack Edwards of Marion, IN, should serve as an inspiration to all of us in public life.

He is an uncommon man.

Jack has been readily recognized for years as he sports his bow-ties and big, white Stetson hat. He still drives a heavily armored Studebaker that he once used to chase John Dillenger across the Indiana countryside. Jack Edwards turned 86 this year, but he remains a colorful, active resident of our community.

To the regret of many, 1987 will also mark the end of the public service career of Jack Edwards—a career which spanned 65 years. From 1922 to 1987, Jack served Marion, IN, in every office of city government. During the depths of the Depression, Jack was both mayor and city judge. Many still remember his unique method of collecting fines in city court by requesting food as payment for wrongdoing, then redistributing it to those who were in need.

Jack did not even consider slowing down as he grew older. When many of his peers were retiring, Jack Edwards was organizing. In 1971, he funded the National Senior Citizens Christian Alliance. I first met him when I was a State legislator, and he was an articulate advocate for the cause of senior citizens in the Indiana General Assembly.

If these responsiblities weren't enough, Jack became a candidate for public office once again, and was elected to the Marion City Council in 1983. Now in these final days of 1987, he will be retiring from his seat on the city council, and many Marion residents will again thank him for a job well done.

Whether as mayor, city clerk, councilman, or city judge, Jack Edwards was distinguished by his flamboyant style and compassionate leadership. Even though he is retiring from elected office this month, I know he will continue his keen interest in politics and public affairs. Office holders, aspirants, and common citizens will continue to seek his counsel and support.

City government in Marion, IN, will soon lose the services of Jack Edwards, but our community will never lose the legacy of his leadership.

I am proud to call Jack Edwards my friend.

RATIONAL AIDS EDUCATION

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the following editorial from the November 20, 1987, issue of the Cape Cod Times. In so doing, I commend both the Times and Scholastic, Inc. for treating the public—both young and old—with the respect they deserve.

The editorial follows:

AIDS CURRICULUM

By now, just about everyone understands at least one thing about AIDS: We have an enormous amount to learn about controlling this deadly disease.

Certainly, the federal government has done little to educate the public (with the exception of Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's informative, concise and readable booklet on the subject). Nor have state health organizations done as much as they might.

Unfortunately, AIDS information is too easy a prey to politics and secular moralizing.

Fortunately, the communications media are beginning to take seriously their role in the dissemination of information.

One excellent example:

Scholastic Inc., this country's largest classroom magazine publishing company, has launched a nationwide campaign to reach as many as 23 million middle school and high school students.

Teachers in at least two schools on the Cape—Dennis-Harmouth Regional High School and Cape Cod Tech in Harwich—are using the 38-page October issue of the publication Scholastic Update as a classroom teaching aid. The publisher sent copies of Update to more than 350,000 educators across the country, and the company's AIDS education program will be continued through nine of the school-age magazines the firm publishes.

The October Update contains 14 articles on AIDS, ranging from the issue of whether students with the disease should be allowed in classrooms, to interviews with AIDS victims and high school students who have volunteered to staff AIDS hot line phone centers. The stories are not alarmist. They treat their school-age readership as rational people. They get their message across.

Scholastic Inc. is to be praised for this calm, sensible, and immensely informative campaign of AIDS education. We hope their mailings include key players in state and federal government, because if ever there was a model for educating young America about AIDS, this is it.

NUCLEAR WASTE PROVISIONS OF BUDGET BILL

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on those provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act for fiscal year 1988 which would amend the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 as they relate to the monitored retrievable storage [MRS] facility.

As we are all aware, the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 established a program for the permanent disposal of radioactive waste, especially spent nuclear fuel rods from the Nation's nuclear reactors used to generate electricity. The law directed the Department of Energy to submit to the Congress a proposal for constructing an MRS facility that would allow for continuous monitoring and easy access of nuclear waste until such time as it could be permanently stored in an underground repository. However, the MRS is now also being viewed as a permanent facility which would be used for waste preparation and packaging prior to sending it to the permanent repository.

Unfortunately, the program envisioned by the 1982 law has been plagued by mismanagement and controversy. The Energy Department has failed to meet all of the statutory deadline, especially as they relate to the selection of the permanent nuclear waste repository. The agency did, however, officially transmit to Congress earlier this year a recommendation to construct the MRS facility at Oak Ridge, TN.

The controversy surrounding this program led the Senate to adopt legislation which would authorize the MRS facility and, in effect, cause the permanent respository to be located in Nevada. The House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, however, reported legislation which would have imposed an 18-month moratorium on nuclear waste activities pending the completion of a study by a special review commission. The Interior Committee bill would also have created a nuclear waste negotiator charged with finding volunteer host States for the MRS and permanent repository.

These matters were the subject of a House-Senate conference committee meeting on this legislation as part of the budget bill. As a member of the conference, I strongly supported the House position of opposing the Senate MRS provisions, although I have supported the prospect of feasibility studies being conducted for the MRS if requested by State Governors.

The legislation finally adopted by the conference committee before us today would authorize an MRS facility only under certain conditions and extremely protracted circumstances. This is no blank check to build a MRS just anywhere.

Under the legislation, a dual system would be established which could lead to the selection of a site for the MRS: First, a nuclear waste negotiator authorized by the bill would attempt to find a volunteer site. If the negotiator is successful in reaching an agreement with a State, Congress must enact legislation to implement the deal. Second, the Energy Department would restart the process of finding a site which led to its earlier decision to locate the MRS at Oak Ridge, TN—a decision which the legislation nullifies. Under this procedure, the MRS authorization would be conditioned upon the Nuclear Regulatory Commission issuing a construction license for a permanent nuclear waste repository which the legislation would place in Nevada.

Also established by the legislation would be a three-member MRS Review Commission appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate. The Commission would evaluate the need for a MRS as part of the Nation's nuclear waste program and make recommendations to the Congress by June 1, 1989.

The legislation would also provide $5 million per year to any State after signing for the MRS and $10 million per year after the first nuclear waste is accepted at the facility. It should be noted that this assistance would be subjected to the annual appropriations process.

More specifically, under the volunteer site method the nuclear waste negotiator, appointed by the President, would attempt to find a State or Indian tribe willing to host the MRS. The negotiator would negotiate with the Governor of any State unless State law authorizes another person other than the Governor to negotiate a proposed agreement.

If the negotiator reaches an agreement with a State, the Energy Department would prepare an environmental assessment during which time public hearings would be held in the vicinity of the proposed site. The proposal would then be submitted to Congress. If Congress authorizes the agreement, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission [NRC] would have 3 years to either approve or disapprove the construction authorization application.

The Energy Department selection method would explicitly link the construction of an MRS to the NRC issuing a license to construct the permanent nuclear waste repository in Nevada. The Energy Department would undertake a survey of potentially suitable sites for an MRS facility and could conduct site-specific activities to gather the information needed to support a license application to the NRC. However, this survey could not begin until after the MRS Commisison submits its report on June 1, 1989. Once the survey is completed, the Energy Department would select one site, conduct public hearings in the vicinity of the proposed site, and complete an environmental assessment. Construction of the MRS facility would be subject to licensing by the NRC.

When the Energy Department selects a site, the host State may disapprove the selection. However, the State's disapproval may be overriden by the Congress. It should be noted that since site characterization activities for the permanent repository site in Nevada would not be completed until 1995, no MRS could be authorized until after that time.

Mr. Speaker, I refused to sign the agreement on the nuclear waste bill worked out by the conference committee because of the confusing and convoluted system the bill envisions for finding a site for the MRS facility.

The legislation first says, yes; we may want an MRS if a State volunteers for it and Congress then authorizes the agreement. At the same time, it says even if a volunteer site cannot be found the Energy Department will go out and find a site as long as the permanent waste repository in Nevada is licensed for construction. But then the legislation second-guesses all of this by telling the Energy Department not to begin surveying sites until a special commission tells us if we should even have an MRS in the first place.

My position has been that we should have the facts first, and conduct the studies, before even considering moving forward with legislation which may lead to the construction of a MRS facility.

I think that it is especially important to note that nothing in this legislation can be construed as meaning that West Virginia is the prime candidate for the MRS. Our State was originally passed over by the Energy Department when it arrived at its recommendation to site the MRS in Tennessee and there are many other areas which have already been studied or which are contenders for this facility. In effect, on the question of where the MRS may, if all conditions are met, eventually be sited the bill is silent.

LEO J. TROMBATORE: AN OUTSTANDING PUBLIC SERVANT

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, one of the most enjoyable and rewarding aspects of public service is the opportunity to meet and work with so many individuals who devote their careers to the betterment of society. One of the most outstanding people that it has been my privilege to know is Leo J. Trombatore. Leo, at the end of the year, is retiring from the California Department of Transportation, Caltrans, after a 40-year career during which he advanced from a young engineer to director, serving in positions throughout the State.

Before Leo ever went to work for Caltrans, when he was still a young engineering student at UCLA, his first highway job was with the city of Hawthorne. I was the mayor of Hawthorne at that time, and so the first paycheck he ever received for transportation work was signed by me. Of course, I didn't know Leo then, but that doesn't stop me for trying to take some credit for his brilliant career.

Leo's tenure with Caltrans began in 1947. When one pauses to consider all the monumental projects that have moved from the planner's table through construction to completion in the intervening, halcyon years, it is not difficult to imagine how exciting Leo's career has been. And given his various posts around the State, it is clear that many of these projects bear Leo's imprimatur.

Most recently, Leo has spent nearly 5 years as Caltrans director. It is in this capacity, the position of highest responsibility within the State department of transportation, that Leo has left what is perhaps his most important mark. When he took over Caltrans, which for many years had been at the cutting edge of all that was new and innovative in highway design and construction technologies, he found a moribund agency. For various reasons, morale had ebbed, needed work was not being delivered, and popular support for transportation was low.

That situation has now been reversed. There is a renewed interest in transportation in California. Work is being demanded and delivered. And Caltrans is once again a department where bright young engineers are proud to say they work. In large measure, Leo is responsible for this revival.

And his outstanding efforts have been appreciated not just by the people of California, but by his peers from around the country as well. In 1983 Leo received the Government Professional Award from the National Society of Professional Engineers. The American Public Works Association recognized him in 1984 as one of the country's top 10 public works officials. At various times he has served as president of the Western Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, and has been on the Executive Committee of the Transportation Research Board and the Executive and Policy Committees of the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, [AASHTO]. And, most recently, AASHTO bestowed upon Leo its prestigious "Thomas H. MacDonald Award." The list of awards and posts he has earned and in which he has served is seemingly endless.

I am proud of the work that Leo has done for California and of the favorable attention that he has brought to the State through the sheer force of his exemplary efforts. But even were it not for that work, his personal characteristics, his honesty and integrity, his perseverance and interest in doing a job and seeing it through, and his steady, solid approach to work and to life; these facets alone would make me proud to have Leo as a friend.

Mr. Speaker, after 40 years, Leo is leaving Caltrans. That very significant chapter of his life will be behind him. Ahead of him lies a new chapter, and Lee and I hope that for Leo, his wife Shirley and their children, it is one filled with all the joy and happiness they have earned and deserve. During this transition that Leo is about to experience, there is at least one thing upon which I hope he knows he can count. To me, Leo will continue to be a great and good friend.

And Leo, if you have the time, I think there is still an interchange in Hawthorne that could use some work.

FAREWELL TO DAVE BOCKORNY

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, today marks the last day David Bockorny will serve as Special Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs.

Dave has been of great service to Members of the House and of great credit to the President during the past 2 years.

We will miss him around here and we wish him well in his new and promising career in the private sector.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION COMMEMORATING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. DAVIS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join the chairman in introducing today a joint resolution commemorating the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee's 100th year. I am convinced that the accomplishments of this committee over the past century are deserving of commendation and recognition.

As the resolution states, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was created on December 21, 1887—100 years ago today—to supersede the Select Committee on American Shipbuilding and Shipowning Interests.

Since the name of the committee does not begin to accurately describe the broad jurisdiction of the committee, I would like to very briefly acknowledge our subcommittees and their areas of responsibility:

Obviously Merchant Marine Subcommittee is responsible for all maritime matters and related marine transportation issues, domestic and international. I think it is important to note that recent events in the Middle East have brought to the forefront the need for freedom of the seas and the role of the merchant marine in our national security.

The Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee oversees all the activities of the U.S. Coast Guard—protection of our shores, inspection and documentation of ships and large boats, vessel safety, traffic control, execution of search-and-rescue missions, enforcement of fishery conservation and economic zones, oil spill containment and cleanup, and enforcement of drug smuggling laws, to name just a few.

The Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment Subcommittee is charged with an equally large area of jurisdiction—promotion of our fisheries as well as fishery conservation, creation of the 200-mile limit, protection of wildlife, habitat and environment, creation of national wildlife refuges, and protection of marine mammals and endangered species.

The Oceanography Subcommittee's jurisdiction is also of great importance in that it continues to develop and broaden legislation dealing with increasing ocean dumping problems, coastal zone management, deep seabed mining, law of the sea issues, and various specific programs such as Sea Grant.

The Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf Subcommittee—this subcommittee has exercised jurisdiction over the operation of the Panama Canal since it was built and played a primary role in developing the implementing legislation for the controversial Panama Canal Treaty. I understand the newer Outer Continental Shelf jurisdiction was developed and broadened during the 1970's primarily as a result of this committee's Coastal Zone Management Act legislation, and the committee's jurisdiction over safety of floating platforms.

Last but not least, under your leadership, Mr. Chairman, we now have our Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee which maintains a watchful eye over all major issues under our jurisdiction.

I hope I have not omitted any significant committee issues in this brief outline. Even if I have, I think you will agree that the list demonstrates just how diverse our jurisdiction is. I personally have always felt that it is this diversity that makes this committee more interesting than most.

As do all coastal areas, the Great Lakes reflect the same diverse interests of the committee. Shipping is a legendary tradition as are our lighthouses and Coast Guard rescue stations. And as the largest fresh water body in the world, the lakes are still a fragile marine environment rich in natural resources that are in need of protection. Also, while the Great Lakes do not have a Panama Canal, they do have the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corp.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to add that I am proud of the fact that the Honorable WALTER B. JONES is our chairman as we celebrate this 100th anniversary. He has led this committee with integrity and fairness for the past 7 years, and has done much to enhance our committee's esteem. Additionally, his leadership in handling problem areas and bringing about reasonable compromise has been outstanding * * * the hallmark of the way in which we do business here.

To conclude, I am proud to serve as the ranking minority member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and am glad that we are publicly and formally acknowledging our 100th anniversary by introducing this resolution today.

ON THE FAMILY WELFARE REFORM ACT OF 1987

HON. JIM LIGHTFOOT

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year there was a great deal of hope that the Congress would be able to develop a plan to overhaul our Nation's welfare system. There appeared to be mutual agreement that our welfare programs needed to be revised to encourage people to move off of Federal assistance and into productive employment through education, training, and work activities. Unfortunately, the House was unable to translate this goal into a plan which I could support.

The welfare reform proposal approved by the House last week, H.R. 1720, seeks to accomplish this task, but I feel that it has fallen far short of this goal. For example, the bill approved by the House creates new barriers to work, mandates more Federal regulation and control, provides for little State flexibility in designing innovative welfare reform programs; and costs the taxpayers a great deal of money.

Instead, I believe the substitute bill offered by my distinguished colleagues, House minority leader BOB MICHEL and Congressman HANK BROWN, moves us in the direction of true welfare reform. For example, this bill called for stronger work requirements and greater State flexibility. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the Michel-Brown substitute bill would have resulted in 935,000 welfare parents participating in work programs versus only 210,000 families participating in work programs under the House-passed welfare bill. The substitute bill would also have resulted in 50,000 families leaving welfare for work, whereas it is estimated that under H.R. 1720 only 15,000 families would leave welfare.

In addition, the Michel-Brown substitute provides the States with greater flexibility to design their own welfare programs. It has been argued that innovative, community-based welfare programs need to be developed in order to reduce welfare dependency. Under the substitute bill, States would have been allowed to develop demonstration projects aimed at providing incentives for people to become independent of welfare. The House-passed welfare reform bill fails to acknowledge States' roles in designing welfare assistance and training programs.

Furthermore, H.R. 1720 increases costs to States by requiring them to finance benefit expansions. Rather than allowing States the option to increase or expand benefits as under current law, the House-approved bill requires States to increase benefits, such as those for two-parent families. For example, it is estimated that H.R. 1720 would impose over $900 million of costs on the States, while the Michel/Brown substitute would have saved the States $479 million over 5 years.

Finally, H.R. 1720 carries a price tag of $5.7 billion over 5 years, compared to a $1.1 billion price tag for the substitute bill. It is hard to imagine that the House of Representatives would approve such a costly bill during this time of fiscal austerity. It is ironic that while we are trying to achieve savings in Federal programs, the House is approving legislation costing the taxpayers billions of dollars without demonstrating that the money will be well spent or will actually accomplish the goal of reducing welfare dependency.

Mr. Speaker, it is not too late to achieve a thorough overhaul of our welfare system. The Senate must now act on welfare reform legislation, and I encourage that body of Congress to take a close look at this issue and to develop a proposal that is more in keeping with the Michel/Brown substitute.

THE RAINBOW WAHINES

HON. PATRICIA F. SAIKI

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mrs. SAIKI. Mr. Speaker, Hawaii athletes this past weekend once again brought honor, distinction, and a national title to the Aloha State.

The University of Hawaii Rainbow Wahine Volleyball Team won the NCAA championships by beating Stanford University 15–10, 15–10, 9–15, and 15–1. The Rainbow Wahines, our women's team, is the first school to win three NCAA women's volleyball championships.

The driving force behind this unsurpassed record is Coach David Shoji. His experience and ability to inspire the best in his players resulted in a 37 to 2 season this year.

This championship is especially sweet for the Wahine's three seniors. Team captain Tita Ahuna, Mahina Eleneki, Suzanne Eagye, and Diana Jessie worked hard to get the Wahine's to Indianapolis, where the NCAA final four championships were held.

All of Hawaii is proud of the University of Hawaii Wahines. They are "no ka oi." In Hawaii, that is our way of saying, there are none better.

THE MYTH OF PAKISTAN AS A HEROIC U.S. ALLY

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention a recent article in the New York Times regarding "The Myth of Pakistan as a Heroic U.S. Ally."

THE MYTH OF PAKISTAN AS A HEROIC U.S. ALLY

TO THE EDITOR: Representative Bill McCollum's views of India and Pakistan (Op-Ed, Dec. 5) are distortions that fail to understand the relationship between the two countries and will only worsen Indian-American relations. Pakistan is not America's ally against Communism as Mr. McCollun claims; it never was. Nor is India an "almost Soviet surrogate"; it never was.

Pakistan joined the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization and Central Treaty Organization alliance in the 1950's, not to advance American strategic objectives against what was seen as a monolithic Chinese-Soviet Communist threat, but to deal with India. After the 1962 Chinese-Indian war, when the Kennedy Administration sought to provide India with arms, Pakistan not only thwarted these efforts but also joined China in a military alliance against India. American arms to Pakistan were used against India in the wars of 1965 and 1971. Not a single Pakistani shot was fired at a Communist country.

United States arming of Pakistan in the late 50's forced India to purchase at considerable cost arms from Britain and France. Only after American denial of arms to India in 1963 did India begin greater military cooperation with the Soviet Union. Even here, India has sought to balance military dependence on the Soviet Union with expensive military purchases from Western Europe.

India's nuclear dilemma began when China conducted an atomic test in 1964—two years after China's war with India and the forging of the unholy Chinese-Pakistani military alliance. While China, then as now, continued to build its nuclear capability, India refrained from pursuing nuclear weapons until 1972. However, the Indian nuclear dilemma became more acute after the Nixon-Kissinger tilt toward Pakistan during the critical Bangladesh crisis of 1971. This was also a time when the United States was pursuing rapprochement with Communist China, the other archenemy of India and ally of Pakistan. Under these circumstances, nuclear guarantees on behalf of India against China became dubious, and the nuclear question was reopened.

After India's 1974 atomic test, the Indian objective of becoming a nuclear power ceased until Pakistan began doggedly to pursue a nuclear weapons program under cover of false assurances to the United States.

The image of Pakistan as the heroic ally of the United States is a fantasy, which right-wing Communist-baiting and India-hating Americans continue to believe steadfastly. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has enabled Pakistan to acquire sophisticated American arms intended mainly for use agaisnt India and to scoff at the Symington Amendment with impunity. Likewise, it is important for the American right to distort the Indian-Soviet military relationship to justify a new round of United States arms to Pakistan, forgetting that Indian military dependence on the Soviet Union was created by American arms to Pakistan. Meanwhile, massive economic aid for Pakistan—the third largest per capita foreign aid the United States gives to any country after Israel and Eqypt—has enabled it to enjoy the highest economic growth rate in South Asia. It is no wonder Pakistan is not serious about resolving the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

Whatever weaknesses Americans perceive in the Indian political and economic system, it is India that has thwarted the advance of Communism in Asia for more than four decades by practicing democracy under the most difficult conditions; and by pursuing a realistic policy of coexistence with the Communist world.

India has no objections to good relations between the United States and Pakistan. But it cannot accept American efforts to counterbalance India by beefing up Pakistani military capabilities under the policy of containing Communism. This warped American vision of South Asia seen through East-West conflict lenses has existed long enough. India and Pakistan are principally concerned with their regional differences. Indeed, if the United States wishes to test this theory, it need only arm India. In no time will Pakistan be seeking military ties with the Soviet Union—as it did with Communist China in the 1960's.

BOB BERRY RETIREMENT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 17, 1987

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, when the 2d session of the 100th Congress convenes in January 1988, this Chamber will not seem like the same place. For the first time in 17 years we will not have the advantage of the fine service Bob Berry has performed as our reading clerk.

Bob has performed his job with such excellence, such skill, and such grace that it is easy for us to forget just how complex and arduous is the position of chief reading clerk for the House. Since 1970, Bob Berry has performed so admirably—with skill, fairness, and expertise—that his shoes will be extremely difficult to fill.

Bob came to us as a native of the great State of South Dakota. Being born and raised in that State, Bob brought to Capitol Hill the pioneering spirit of individual initiative and American know-how which have served us so well for as long as he held this position.

Bob Berry brought with him also a family history of public service. As the son of one of our most distinguished colleagues, the Hon. E.Y. Berry, who served in the House with distinction from 1951 to 1971, Bob's imminent departure marks the conclusion of a 36-year tradition in this Chamber; a tradition of excellence in public service.

Bob is a veteran of our armed services. His 2-year stint on active duty in the Army took him to our Nation's Far East Command during the Korean conflict. In that position, Bob had the opportunity to observe and to participate in some of the major decisions of the day. Later, Bob served with the Combat Engineers 211th Batallion Headquarters of the South Dakota National Guard.

Bob Berry brought to his position a lifetime of experience, which he gained as a practicing attorney, as an assistant to the late Senator Karl Mundt, and as minority counsel of the Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee in the Senate.

The tenure of Bob Berry as House reading clerk from 1970 to 1987 covers some of the most historic and emotion-packed Congresses in history. Bob Berry's performance as our reading clerk was a shining example to all of us.

To Bob and his family, we wish the best of luck as Bob leaves our hallowed halls for greener pastures.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all of our colleagues to join with us in bidding a fond farewell to this outstanding public servant, with the realization that the gain of the American Gas Association is our loss.

AIDS EDUCATION

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that last week during the conference on the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill, conferees clarified the types of AIDS educational materials and programs that may be funded by the Federal Government. While the bill provides that Federal funds may not be used for materials and programs that directly promote or encourage homosexual activity, the conferees have made it clear that Congress does not intend to prohibit descriptions of methods to reduce the risk of HIV transmission.

On October 20, when the House approved a motion to instruct conferees to adopt language that would prohibit the Centers for Disease Control from giving funds to AIDS educational materials or activities that "promote or encourage, directly or indirectly, homosexual activities," I spoke on the floor against this amendment because it threatened the efforts of the Gay Men's Health Crisis and other groups which have provided targeted educational materials to fight the spread of AIDS. As I said that day on the floor and I believe it bears repeating, the Gay Men's Health Crisis, through its carefully targeted materials, has played a significant role in helping reduce the incidence of AIDS in the gay community in New York City. Their efforts should be commended and nurtured, not condemned or hindered.

It is my understanding that as the wording now stands, federally funded materials and programs that are geared for the gay community may describe the best methods of reducing the risk of HIV transmission in that community. Those materials and programs would not be viewed as directly promoting homosexual activity but rather would be viewed as acknowledging that homosexual activity exists, and providing the important preventative information necessary in light of such activity. I believe that this is a useful and important clarification made by the conferees and I applaud them for their efforts to make clear the intent of Congress with regard to this provision.

BUDGET RECONCILIATION LEGISLATION

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, the budget reconciliation health subconferences have reached agreement on which provisions should be included in the legislation. The Medicaid subconference addressed three provisions and the conferees have agreed to include all three. Two of these provisions are very good and worth funding. They include a compromise version of nursing home reform, a significant reduction over past House spending levels for Medicaid, and an amendment to the disproportionate share provision that provides a waiver for the State of New York to continue its current State pooling arrangements.

The third provision, however, lacks merit as written and taxpayers should not be burdened with it. This dreadful provision is the funding mechanism and amendments to the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986.

Unfortunately, this provision has been packaged in such a manner that I would be forced to agree to all three provisions although I support only two. I am not the only Member caught in this dilemma. Representatives DANNEMEYER, TAUKE, and WHITTAKER, the other House Republican conferees on this subconference, agree that this vaccine compensation provision represents poor judgment.

The vaccine compensation provisions exemplify the congressional conference process at its worst. The public can now see how this legislative body passes controversial and costly legislation by burying it in the middle of important legislation that many Members feel compelled to vote for.

Supporters of the vaccine provisions might recall that during the 99th Congress I supported the Vaccine Compensation Program passed by the Energy and Commerce Committee and ultimately signed into law. The Energy and Commerce Committee could not enact financing of this program because it required that a surcharge be levied on vaccine doses, for which jurisdiction rests with the Ways and Means Committee. Because no action was taken by the Finance Committees in the 99th Congress, the Vaccine Compensation Program has not taken effect. Although I want to see the 1986 Vaccine Injury Act funded, I cannot support the funding and the amendments that are contained in the subconference action.

When the Vaccine Injury Act was enacted, it was with the understanding that children injured before the passage of the act would be treated the same as children injured after the act. The conference report changes this. It was also understood that adequate funding would be developed to pay all claims without having to rely on the vagaries of the appropriations process. The conference action also changes this. I am convinced that the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, as funded and amended by H.R. 3545, will not work. I agree with those supporters of the 1986 act who have said that this legislation is "fiscally unsound, inequitable, and unworkable."

We do not serve the public interest when we legislate important and controversial programs out of the sight of the public, as we are about to do by considering the omnibus budget reconciliation bill. This process deprives the Members of the House the opportunity to debate the merits of individual programs. It is a disservice to the American public.

POPULATION ASSISTANCE POLICY

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like the record to reflect two actions in the area of international family planning programs taken recently in the 1988 foreign assistance appropriations process.

On December 3, 1987, the Senate Appropriations Committee rejected an amendment to the 1988 Foreign Assistance and Related Appropriations Bill which would have withdrawn the President's statutory authority to declare ineligible for population assistance foreign nongovernmental organizations that perform or actively promote abortion as a method of family planning. The recorded vote was 14–11 against the amendment.

Earlier, on August 6, 1987, the House Appropriations Committee rejected a similar amendment by a recorded vote of 26–21, thus leaving intact the President's antiabortion eligibility policy.

These actions reflect the policy of the U.S. Government to provide strong support for voluntary population programs but firm opposition to abortion as a method of family planning.

That the President has the authority to promulgate the so-called Mexico City Policy is beyond dispute as any reading of the relevant statute and legislative history will reveal. For example, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 as amended states very clearly, ". . . the President is authorized to furnish assistance, on such terms and conditions as he may determine, for Voluntary Population Planning." (22 U.S.C. § 2151b(b))

I would also remind Members that 2 years ago the House went on record overwhelmingly in favor of an amendment I offered that expressly endorsed the President's Mexico City Policy. The vote was 234 to 189 (July 10, 1985).

THE GREAT CRANBERRY CRISIS

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, in today's Wall Street Journal is an article written by Mr. Harold (Hal) Thorkilsen, the president of Ocean Spray Cranberries, Inc., which is located in the Ninth Congressional District of Massachusetts which I represent. I commend this article to members of our business community for its insight into the successful business strategies employed at Ocean Spray Cranberries, Inc.

My good friend, Hal, is stepping down as president of Ocean Spray Cranberries, Inc., at the end of this month but I think his accomplishments and his style of management can serve as a truly outstanding model for our Nation's corporate community for years to come. I wish him the best in the future.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Dec. 21, 1987]

Lessons of the Great Cranberry Crisis

(By Harold Thorkilsen)

All too often, successful companies can fall victim to a byproduct of their own success: complacency.

It is when products are moving well, customers are happy and profits are high that complacency, like an undetected virus, can move in on a firm. The effects can sometimes be devastating, in terms of lost markets, plummeting sales, job layoffs, plant closings, and even takeovers or company closedowns.

A classic example is Detroit's experience in the 1950s and 1960s, when auto makers with full order books believed their hold on the U.S. market was secure forever. Not until the public began buying the new, high-quality imports did Detroit realize it might have been taking its customers for granted. It took years of attention to workmanship, quality standards and production costs before a significant turnaround began. Car makers, in their complacency, had failed to keep abreast of their clients' changing needs.

Similarly, companies with best-selling products that overlook subtle changes in consumer tastes are susceptible to the complacency bug. Back in the days of the so-called energy crisis, my organization started looking around for ways to package our products that would be more cost-efficient and less energy-dependent. Nowhere in the U.S. could we find anything suitable. But by looking abroad we discovered the new technology of aseptic "paper bottles," which we promptly introduced. American container makers, it seemed, had been perfectly happy with their existing product line. Their complacency lost them a lucrative new market.

Sometimes it can take a near catastrophe to reveal the extent of corporate complacency. At Ocean Spray, we learned the hard way after a crisis situation years ago that almost put our cranberry growers' cooperative out of business.

In those days, consumption of the fruit was almost entirely confined to the serving of cranberry sauce at Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners. We were quite content, at the time, with this single-purpose, single-season usage of our product. We were complacent.

Then disaster struck. Just before one Thanksgiving holiday, federal authorities reported that a pesticide used by some West Coast growers had caused cancer in laboratory rats. Although this widely publicized scare turned out later to be erroneous, pre-holiday TV coverage of "The Great Cranberry Crisis" cut sales drastically and came close to ruining our growers and their cooperative.

In the aftermath of this catastrophe, we were forced to re-think our entire marketing philosophy and management style. We acknowledged, first, that self-satisfaction, short-term thinking and ignorance of consumer needs were the reasons we had never developed a year-round product line. Then, after an extensive R&D effort, we embarked on a continuing program to diversify and create a year-round market by producing cranberry-based juice drinks and other products. By marketing our new beverages as "good for you"—just when consumers were starting to demand natural, healthier products—our organization was fortunate enough to save itself.

Our experience showed us several ways in which managers can spot early signs of "the complacency factor" and take corrective steps. One way is to institute a regular corporate review and self-examination process. This can work in any organization, but seems particularly apt for old, established companies, where the risks of status-quo thinking and entrenched working methods may be high.

At Ocean Spray (founded in 1930) a small management committee monitors every aspect of our operation on a biweekly basis. We examine and question, for instance, the breadth of our product line and consumer outlets, new products and packaging under development, our manufacturing and distribution methods, customer comments and complaints received, salesmen's reports, results of ongoing market research, our company policies and actions by competitors. In particular, we watch closely any product, packaging or working system that has remained unchanged for three years or longer. In some cases, we appoint a study group to examine a specific product whose performance might be improved.

As part of the corporate culture, we also let employees know that we encourage a spirit of innovation, entrepreneurism, risk-taking, questioning of orthodox methods and "thinking the unthinkable." Through such measures, and by staying vigilant, it is possible for a company to keep smugness and complacency at bay.

Other effective countercomplacency steps can include:

Staying in close touch with consumers, trade factors and suppliers to get an honest reading of how outsiders view the company's products and marketing methods. This process has helped us to quickly spot our occasional product failures, such as a cranberry-prune juice drink and a vegetable juice cocktail that consumers flatly rejected. It has shown us shortcomings in package sizing or design. It has also led us to capitalize on successful new ideas such as a tropical drink using Hawaiian guava fruit and the blending of a pink grapefruit-juice cocktail.

Encouraging the free exchange of ideas and suggestions, however farfetched, at every employee level. In our case, this "bottom-up" approach has been responsible for innovations such as the first ultraviolet cranberry sorter, better methods of crop harvesting, lighter shipping cartons, a cost-saving revision of our truck delivery system, more effective quality control with fewer inspectors, and an improved way of moving bottles down a line, suggested by a new employee.

Openness to new ideas, closeness to consumers and constant watchfulness are among the most potent weapons an organization can use to guard against the dangers of self-satisfaction and complacency.

YUGOSLAVIAN-MADE MINES MAY ENDANGER AMERICAN LIVES

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was dismayed to read that American ships in the Persian Gulf may be endangered by acoustic mines manufactured in Yugoslavia.

These mines were sold by Yugoslavia to Libya, which later traded them to Iran for poison gas, according to press reports.

I find it shocking that Yugoslavia, a nation with which we have relatively good relations, would be willing to sell high-tech weapons of war to the terrorist Qadhafi. Whatever assurances Qadhafi may have given about the "end use" of those mines—if indeed he gave any—could not be worth the paper they were written on.

I think that the Yugoslavian Government should realize that sales to outlaws such as Qadhafi can only lead to a sharp reassessment of American policy toward Yugoslavia, and the Yugoslavian Government should not be surprised that such a reassessment, based on this incident and other problems in that country, is now underway.

THE HAITIAN ELECTION DAY VIOLENCE

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, Haitian junta leader Gen. Henri Namphy was quoted last Tuesday in the French newspaper Liberation, as saying that the Army he heads had taken no part in the election day violence in Haiti on November 29. "The army," he said, "didn't even know who was shooting whom." However, foreign reporters in the provinces and in Port-au-Prince, Haiti's capital, witnessed Army participation in actions against voters and electoral officials. One American photographer stated that there were men in uniform among those who attacked voters at a Port-au-Prince polling place and killed 14 Haitians and a television cameraman from the Dominican Republic. When soldiers were not directly involved in the arson, the shootings and the knifings, they often stood passively by. At least five American reporters and photographers were attacked by a band of machete-wielding thugs, not more than 100 meters from the Army's highway checkpoint near the town of St. Marc. The ballots to be distributed throughout the northern city Gonaives were taken from the electoral office on election day morning at 7, and burned in the street just around the corner from the local Army headquarters. The night before, as in Port-au-Prince, gunfire raked the homes and offices of democratic leaders; at best, the Haitian Army did nothing to stop the violence.

The next day, after the junta announced that order was to be reinstated, the violence suddenly stopped. One must presume that those who could stop this violence the day after the elections could have stopped it the day before.

There is little question that Namphy's regime wanted the elections cancelled. Now the Namphy regime has disbanded the original electoral council and published a new election law which will allow soliders, but not independent observers, into polling stations. This is virtually a guarantee of electoral abuse.

The four candidates, who are estimated to control approximately 80 percent of the electorate, have demanded that the regime step down. They vow to unite together and boycott the balloting.

Still, the Department has not completely rejected the Haitian junta. Furthermore, it has refused to acknowledge the regime's complicity in the attacks on voters, polling places, and candidates, two of whom were murdered in the months leading up to the elections, one of them in front of the police headquarters that sits across from the Presidential Palace where Namphy works.

The United States has suspended military and nonhumanitarian aid to Haiti in light of the election day debacle. I urge the State Department to go further, and make plain to the Haitian junta that it will not acknowledge any council other than the original council, will not support any election organized by a council other than the original council, and will not recognize any president, senator or municipal official elected in Army-organized polling.

In addition, I join Chairman FASCELL and several other of my colleagues in supporting efforts to explore sending a mulitnational force to Haiti to monitor the January 17 election.

We cannot countenance any further trampling of the infant democratic movement in Haiti.

THE DECEMBER 16, 1987, ELECTIONS HELD IN THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH KOREA

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in order to congratulate Mr. Roh Tae Woo on his victory in the December 16 balloting in South Korea. I would also congratulate the people of that great nation on the successful completion of this event, which brings them that much closer to the goal of full democratization. Particularly impressive is the fact that better than 90 percent of South Koreans participated in the voting and many of them actively participated in the campaigns prior to the elections—I only wish we could get that kind of interest in this country's elections process.

According to the U.S. State Department and a number of "unofficial" U.S. congressional staff observers, the voting appeared "to have been conducted in an open and orderly manner" and that "the opposite parties had elections observers at balloting and ballot-counting places." As for charges of widespread fraud, made by the unsuccessful candidates, the State Department has reported that it could find no evidence of such.

Those charges must, however, be addressed. I am hopeful that the Korean people will resolve their problems peacefully and through legal channels established under the presidential election law adopted in November 1987. Only then can the difficult process of reconciliation proceed.

Following the elections, Mr. Roh made a number of important and timely statements including an offer of general amnesty for political prisoners and a restated commitment to national reconciliation. I applaud Mr. Roh for those statements and take this opportunity to wish him Godspeed as he embarks on this most difficult task which lies ahead.

In closing, I would also offer praise to the opposition candidates for their hard work in making a positive contribution to the process and for their commitment to their respective ideals.

As time goes on, and further progress is made toward national reconciliation and full democratization, all South Koreans will come to know that in a truly democratic process there are no losers—only winners.

THANK YOU, BOB BERRY

HON. CLARENCE E. MILLER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 17, 1987

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my House colleagues in paying tribute to the "voice of the House Chamber" for the past 18 years: Mr. Bob Berry.

As we all know, Bob is leaving Capitol Hill after nearly 29 years of service. He will be deeply missed. During his service as GOP reading clerk, Bob has distinguished himself by his diligence, his sense of responsibility and a working knowledge of the legislative process that has proven essential to the procedures of the Congress. We oftentimes tend to take certain functions—and persons—for granted in the midst of the legislative process. Bob has done his job so well and so completely over the years, that—frankly—we have tended to overlook the exemplary manner in which he has fulfilled his important responsibilities. Upon his retirement from the House, it is both fitting and appropriate that we—the beneficiaries of his good work—take the time to express our collective appreciation to a man who has earned our respect and admiration.

It is a pleasure and honor for me to join with my House colleagues in paying tribute to a public servant who has truly been a voice of democracy—each and every time the House assembles. Thank you, Bob, for a splendid job and for giving us the pleasure of working in the company of a true professional. I wish you the very best as you move to your new post.

AN EXCITING DAY AT THE WHITE HOUSE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform my colleagues of an excursion of the Trinity Bell Ringers of Hackettstown, NJ, this past Saturday, December 19. The bell ringers, of which my daughter Donica is a member, were asked to perform at the White House.

The bell ringers, under the care of Bertyl Glass, gave a lovely performance. The President and Mrs. Reagan hosted the event for military officers and their wives. The group had a wonderful time, and meeting the President made their trip extra special.

Those in attendance included Andrew Bernard, Michelle Bowers, Kimberly Cacchio, Donica Courter, Faith Fowler, Garrett Glass, Lovell Gordon, Scott Hammond, Steven Kinsey, David McGill, Cynthia Morgan, Arpana Naik, Melanie Russell, Darryll Sandrue, Heather Stirling, Tonya Stirling, Susan Thomson, Jennifer Vangolen, and Elizabeth Johnson.

Congratulations on a job well done!

AMALGAMATED BANK OF NEW YORK

HON. THOMAS J. RIDGE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues an important article on the Amalgamated Bank of New York published in the December 14, 1987, issue of the Wall Street Journal. As a member of the House Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs concerned with improving financial services for the American consumer, I was greatly impressed with the innovative, service-driven orientation of this bank. Owned by the 284,000 members of the Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers, the Amalgamated Bank of New York has a track record of 44 consecutive years of profit while providing unmatched, unparalleled service to its members. I sincerely hope that many of the financial chief executive officers across the Nation review this article and consider its message. Most importantly, the members of the Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers, its leadership and the employees of the Amalgamated Bank of New York deserve congratulations for such an achievement. Mr. Speaker, I want to invite my colleagues to read this informative article.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Dec. 14, 1987]

(By Robert L. Rose)

NEW YORK.—When Amalgamated Bank of New York introduced a free checking account last fall, it wasn't content to quietly inform its customers. The bank bought an ad opposite the editorial page in the New York Times and asked: "Why is free checking only for those who can afford to pay for it?"

The bank's inclination to tweak its big corporate rivals isn't surprising. Amalgamated is a union bank, founded in 1923 by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and still owned by the 284,000 members of its successor, the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers.

Heralded as the wave of the future by labor leaders earlier in the century, labor banking was a flop. Out of some 36 labor banks founded in the 1920s, only Amalgamated in New York and Brotherhood Bank & Trust in Kansas City, Kan., survive as labor-owned institutions.

Now, with some labor experts predicting a comeback in union membership and influence, Amalgamated provides one of the oldest examples of a kind of labor-owned business that may multiply. In the past several years, about half a dozen new labor banks have opened, and more are on the way. Like the clothing workers who started Amalgamated, other unions see a chance to own a bank friendly to their members' needs and find new investment outlets for their growing assets.

A ROGUE BANK

Amalgamated survived largely because its union owner insisted on conservative banking and professional management. In contrast, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers set up banks across the country during the 1920s and quickly branched into securities and even Florida land development. Losses piled up, and the union eventually charged four of its officers with mishandling funds. By 1931, the engineers were out of the banking business.

Amalgamated has also benefited from being something of a rogue bank, loudly touting a consumer ethic and often de-emphasizing profits in favor of services. Its free checking account is only the latest evidence: Amalgamated claims to have pioneered the unsecured installment loan in the 1920s, lending money to borrowers with no collateral but a steady job. Three times a survey has named it the top bank for consumers in New York City. "They give me the best treatment," says Mike Garcia, an officer of the Leather Goods, Plastic and Novelty Workers' Union, who says he banks at Amalgamated because of its labor roots.

OVERLAPPING CONSTITUENCIES

Amalgamated has reported 44 consecutive years of profit and has grown to $1.47 billion in assets by serving two overlapping constituencies: middle-class consumers and organized labor. Now, the union-owned bank is exploring other ways to use its labor ties and financial muscle to expand in new areas.

Earlier this year, Amalgamated teamed up with Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in a proposal to offer a comprehensive money-management program for the AFL-CIO's 14.5 million members. On a smaller but no less innovative scale, Amalgamated is helping three New York locals of the Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Union use some of their pension money to finance below-market, no-points home mortgages for their members. The bank is considering expanding the service to other unions, many of which have retirement trust funds under Amalgamated's care.

The recent mini-resurgence of labor banking is led by unions in the construction trades. Massachusetts members of the carpenters' union opened a Boston bank in September, and California carpenters plan to open a separate institution next year. Two-year-old Union Savings Bank in Albuquerque, N.M., another construction-trades bank, uses its $10 million in assets for loans to small businesses and other customers.

"I think there's been a realization that we should be generating jobs with our own money wherever possible," says Anthony Ramos, the retired former leader of the California State Council of Carpenters.

Amalgamated's loud voice on consumer issues is partly a marketing ploy to set itself apart from the pack. As other banks cater to big depositors and raise fees for small accounts, Amalgamated promotes treats for the little guy, such as its free checking and low-interest personal loans.

Highly conscious of its labor roots, Amalgamated also likes to take shots at the extablishment banks. In one of its radio commercials, a stuffy banker tells a customer he needs a password to sit down. "The name of any Ivy League school will do," says the banker. P.S. 188?" asks the customer, naming the public school he attended. In other ads, comedians Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara imitate rank-and-filers with names like Rocco and Blanche, and pitch "America's Labor Bank."

"If we give [the industry] an uncomfortable feeling for a couple of hours, it will be worth it," concludes Edward M. Katz, Amalgamated's president and chief executive.

The bank's five-story brick headquarters, which it shares with its union owner, overlooks New York's Union Square, the site of labor and political rallies earlier in the century. Back in the old days, Amalgamated's services even included a travel agency and foreign-exchange desk for the immigrant population that dominated the clothing worker's union. Today, customers in open shirts and work boots outnumber those in business suits. Proclaims a plaque on the lobby wall: "New York's First Labor Bank, dedicated to the service and advancement of the labor movement."

Mr. Katz, too, is quick to prove his allegiance. After ushering a visitor into his office, he flips open his suit jacket and proudly shows the union label. A soft-spoken man of 66 who started as a part-timer at the bank in 1946, Mr. Katz raises his voice when he talks about how small depositors have fared under banking deregulation. Not too well, he believes. "When you have a special industry using Uncle Sam as an umbrella in times of difficulty, don't you owe something to the public?" he asks. "What would be so wrong with having an account on which you don't make money?"

Amalgamated, though is bucking a strong trend. A national survey conducted by the Consumer Federation of America and others found that fees for routine banking services are rising sharply for most depositors.

In some ways, Amalgamated has a lot less to offer those customers than its competitors. Small by big-bank standards, it doesn't generally offer credit cards or home mortgages. With only three branches and two newly opened automated teller machines, it lacks what many consumers want most: convenience. And in the ranks of big-league banks, Amalgamated is an also-ran, shunning such trends as interstate expansion and the hot competition for corporate loans.

"I'm not conscious of their presence" as a competitor, says Richard Ravitch, the chairman and chief executive of Bowery Savings Bank, which has about four times the assets and eight times the branches of Amalgamated. Contends another New York banking official: "If they were the best, they'd be bigger."

But what Amalgamated does have it pushes hard, especially its reputation as a low-cost consumer bank. Last year, when an annual survey by New York State Sen. Franz S. Leichter dropped Amalgamated to No. 11 from No. 1 as the least expensive bank for New York City consumers, Amalgamated officials phoned the legislator and angrily complained. (The bank is back up to No. 2 this year.) In 1985, the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan New York challenged Amalgamated's boast of having the lowest auto-loan rates of any bank in the city. But the bank quickly backed up the claim, the bureau says.

Amalgamated says its current 9.2% interest rate on new auto loans is still the best in the city. According to the Bank Rate Monitor, seven of the largest bank and thrift institutions in the New York City area charge an average of nearly 12.5%. On the deposit side, the bank's 6.25% annual yield on money-market accounts is a third of a point higher than the average paid by 10 big institutions tracked by the monitor.

Amalgamated also pays interest and charges no fees on savings accounts with a $5 minimum. And it is not unusual for the bank to get thank-you notes from longtime customers surprised to find the bank honored their checks—and charged no penalty—on their overdrawn accounts.

Customers' main compaint centers on what bank employees call "the conga line" that often slowly snakes its way to 23 tellers in the lobby of the main office. Still, other factors outweigh the long waits, depositors say. Edward Soorko, for example, says he moved his account to Amalgamated after Citibank bounced a check for his son's tuition—even though he covered the check with a deposit the same day.

Charles Nabelle, a dapper 82-year-old customer in a white hat and sports coat, walks 13 blocks to get to Amalgamated's Union Square office. There are plenty of closer banks, but he says he chose Amalgamated because he likes the personal attention he gets there. After cashing a $40 check, Mr. Nabelle offers a short lecture on the importance of shopping for bank services. "A poor sucker will go for Chase Manhattan as opposed to Amalgamated because Chase or Citibank is an important bank," he says. "That is unfortunate."

And perhaps costly. Sen. Leichter's latest survey found that a typical bank customer with $500 in checking and $1,000 in savings would earn $105 in a year at Amalgamated and lose $100 in Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. Amalgamated, says Glenn von Nostitz, the legislative aide who oversees the survey, shows "you can give people a break and still make money."

Not surprisingly, Amalgamated has kept a close relationship with organized labor. Unions account for up to two-thirds of its $1.1 billion in deposits, and its trust department holds an additional $3.2 billion in pension and health-and-welfare funds. Amalgamated manages $1.6 billion of the trust funds, shunning stocks and corporate bonds in favor of safer government securities.

In 1973, Amalgamated officials worked over a weekend to fill out hundreds of bail checks to keep striking Philadelphia teachers out of jail. Nine years later, when the National Football League Players Association ran out of money during its strike, it turned to Amalgamated for a $200,000 loan. The players' union didn't have an account with the bank at the time, but "we did after that," says Ed Garvey, then the union's executive director.

Although neither the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers union nor the bank likes to admit it, the goal of giving consumers and unions a break often conflicts with the goal of making money. But Mr. Katz has the luxury of working for owners who aren't constantly pressing for higher profits. "You make a little less," concedes Jack Sheinkman, the president of the union and chairman of the bank. "Despite that, we've done very well in terms of our return on equity and on capital," which exceed the average for banks Amalgamated's size.

That attitude makes it easier for the bankers to concentrate on another priority of union—financial safety. The bank has a few corporate customers and, as a matter of policy, turns down offers to participate with other banks in corporate lending. "I don't want to rely on my big brothers" to determine if a loan is safe, says Mr. Katz. Nor does he like to gamble on investments. Mr. Katz prefers buying U.S. government securities, and the shorter the maturity the better. "All the money's tied up in cash," jokes Howard Lee, the executive vice president and cashier.

The result is steady, if not spectacular, profits. Last year, Amalgamated earned $12.2 million, sending $7 million of that in dividends to its union owners. Government bank examiners often do double takes when they pore over Amalgamated's books. Bad loans charged off in 1986: $195,000 out of $313.5 million, far below the average for banks its size. Auto loans delinquent 30 days or more at the end of November: 11 out of 13,044.

Says William A. Goldberg, who runs the bank's personal-loan department: "We're here for the average guy—so long as we are reasonably assured he'll pay us back."

This beautiful and talented group are sponsored by Diane Martin and Robin Moore.

Of course the Rockwall Super Band, with band directors Cathy Hill, Jay Back, Mike McGill, and Jim Whitfill, and the band, led by drum majors, Corbin Wilson and Michele Hammers, were an inspiring and integral part—matching the team in precision, performance, success and plain hard work. These leaders, along with the following band members, spurred our team on:

Craig Murray, Jeff Murray, Nicole Nemec, Heather Parker, Meredith Roy, Gina Burnett, Jennifer Johnson, Kay Sorrells, Tiffany Hebert, Kristie Jones, Eric Camp, Sean Eubanks, Jennie Freeman, Tonya Harbison, Brad Helmer, Greg Hudspeth.

Mr. Speaker, when the football season started for district 5-AAAA, no one expected the Yellowjackets to do more than put up a good fight against other high-ranked district and northeast Texas teams, such as McKinney (State champion, 1979), Denison (State champion, 1984), Paris (ranked in the top 10 all year), Ennis, and others. To add to Yellowjacket concerns, there was a change in the head coaching position just before our season began—a season that would see us lose two of the first three games. Then—the cinderella-like climb began for Rockwall High School—one that led to the finals—a battle between the best team in north Texas, and the best team in south Texas. In this game there could be no loser and there was none. At the end of the 48 minute contest at Texas A&M Kyle Field last Saturday, the defending State AAAA champion, West Orange-Stark (ranked ninth nationally) had outscored our Jackets by a mere 10 points—17 to 7. No one in Rockwall feels that we suffered a defeat, but all feel that our team, week after week, performed a miracle—and I can't start to tell you how proud we all are of them. Our Yellowjackets are champions and the only reason Troy Miller should not be named "coach of the year" would be that he is named "coach of the century." The Yellowjackets, quarterbacked by Andy Hollon, are as follows:

Kevin Kaufman, Chad Keck, David Piepenburg, Daron Gillian, Keith Williams, Chris Burks, Dallas Eshelman Rodney Glaze, Kelly Johns, Robbie Birleson, Maika Hayes, Brandon Kennedy, Tony McGuire, Brian Thomas, Brant Gillen, Waymon Moore, Kris Mason, Byron Cromer, Brian McCormick, Jim White.

The trainers are: Jim Harris, Mike Thomas, Gary Godwin, and the Rockwall High School principal is Ron Eubanks.

No one could be more proud of this team effort. Fans, parents, relatives, and supporters are all proud and pleased with our Yellowjackets. Mr. Speaker, as we adjourn today—and as we close out the first half of the 100th Congress—let us adjourn in recognition of the Rockwall Fighting Yellowjackets of 1987—the team who never quit—who were winners on the gridiron and will certainly be winners and leaders in the years that are ahead of them.

H.R. 3777—CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM ACT OF 1987

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, on December 16, 1987, I was joined by eight of my colleagues in introducing H.R. 3777, the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1987, on behalf of the administration.

This proposed legislation will complete the major crime prevention initiative originally proposed by the administration during the 98th Congress—an initiative which has already seen enactment of many criminal justice reforms as part of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984.

The three measures contained in this bill are extremely important for those wish to see crime abated in this country. First, there is reform of the exclusionary rule that would permit the introduction at trial of evidence seized under circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief that the search or seizure was in conformity with the fourth amendment of the Constitution. This is the so-called good faith exception. Second, the bill would reform the exercise of the habeas corpus writ in order to minimize its interference with the criminal justice systems of the States and to promote finality. Third, the bill provides constitutional procedures for the imposition of the death penalty in Federal capital offenses.

Law enforcement can prevent crime only if we give it tools which are proper for the task. The reforms contained in this proposed legislation provide measures which are critically important to law enforcement's responsibility. Measures such as are contained in this bill—reforms of the exclusionary rule, habeas corpus, and capital punishment—have already been passed in the Senate as separate bills by large majorities. Legislation to provide the death penalty for those who commit murder during the course of a continuing drug enterprise, which is part of this bill, was passed overwhelmingly by the House three times during the 99th Congress as an amendment to the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986.

I appreciate, as we all do, the general support that exists for these important proposals and hopefully this heavy weight of public opinion will be the best incentive for their expeditious consideration.

Mr. Speaker, America has been waiting for the reestablishment of an equilibrium within our criminal justice system that will protect the interests of the law-abiding to the same extent that those of the criminal are considered. Passage of this bill will move a long way toward that goal and I urge my colleagues to join me in prompting early action.

H.R. 3777—CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM ACT OF 1987—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

The proposed Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1987 would enact a number of important reforms in the operation of the federal criminal justice system. Title I would revise standards relating to the admission of evidence obtained through searches and seizures. Title II would amend the procedures for collateral review of criminal judgments, including federal habeas corpus review of state judgments and the corresponding collateral remedy for federal prisoners. Title III would establish constitutionally sound procedures and standards for the imposition of capital punishment for especially heinous federal crimes.

TITLE I—EXCLUSIONARY RULE

Title I of the Criminal Justice Reform Act would (1) generally bar the exclusion of evidence obtained in circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief that a search or seizure was in conformity with the Fourth Amendment, and (2) clarify that evidence cannot be excluded on the basis of non-constitutional violations unless such exclusion is expressly authorized by law.

The principal reform proposed in Title I—an objective reasonableness standard for the admission of evidence—is very similar to exclusionary rule reform legislation that was passed by the Senate as S. 1764 in the 98th Congress and by the House of Representatives as section 673 of H.R. 5484 in the 99th Congress. A detailed discussion of the policy issues raised by this reform appears in the Senate Judiciary Committee's report on S. 1764 (S. Rep. No. 350, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. (1984)). The ensuing analysis briefly describes and explains the provisions of Title I.

Section 102 of Title I would add a new section 3508 to the federal criminal code. Subsection (a) of proposed section 3508 provides that evidence shall not be excluded in any federal proceeding on the ground that a search or seizure was in violation of the Fourth Amendment if the search or seizure was carried out in circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief that it was in conformity with the Fourth Amendment. This would apply the underlying principle of United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897 (1984), so as to bar the exclusion of evidence obtained in such circumstances in cases involving warrantless searches, as well as in cases involving searches pursuant to a warrant. Th Leon decision specifically barred the suppression of evidence obtained in conformity with a warrant in circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief in the warrant's validity, noting that excluding evidence where an officer's conduct is objectively reasonable "will not further the ends of the exclusionary rule in any appreciable way; for it is painfully apparent that . . . the officer is acting as a reasonable officer would and should act in similar circumstances. Excluding the evidence can in no way affect his future conduct unless it is to make him less willing to do his duty." Leon, 468 U.S. at 920.

This principle has already been applied for several years by the federal courts in the Fifth and Eleventh Circuits in deciding on the admissibility of evidence obtained through searches and seizures in both warrant and non-warrant cases. See United States v. Williams, 622 F.2d 830 (5th Cir. 1980). The standard of objective reasonableness is also uniformly applied in determining an officer's exposure to civil liability based on an allegedly unlawful search or seizure. See Anderson v. Creighton, —— U.S. ——, No. 85-1520 (June 25, 1987).

Subsection (a) of proposed section 3508 perpetuates as a special case the specific holding of United States v. Leon, supra, that evidence is not subject to suppression if obtained in objectively reasonable reliance on a warrant. As in Leon, the circumstances relevant to the determination of objective reasonableness in warrant cases under subsection (a) would include the circumstances under which the warrant was obtained as well as the circumstances under which it was executed. See Leon, 468 U.S. at 923 n.24.

Subsection (a) also provides specifically that the fact that evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of the existence of circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief that a search or seizure was in conformity with the Fourth Amendment. This reflects the fact that "[i]n the ordinary case, an officer cannot be expected to question the magistrate's probable-cause determination or his judgment that the form of the warrant is technically sufficient." Leon, 468 U.S. at 897. Thus, the fact that evidence was obtained in conformity with a warrant would be adequate to establish objective reasonableness in the absence of rebuttal by the defendant, such as a showing that the issuance of the warrant was predicated on a fraudulent affidavit or that the warrant was so patently deficient on its face that an officer could not reasonably believe it to be valid. See generally Leon 468 U.S. at 922-23.

Subsection (b) of proposed section 3508 would bar the exclusion of evidence on the basis of non-constitutional violations, except as expressly authorized by statute or by a rule promulgated by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority. Given the high price of the exclusionary rule to the truth-finding process, and the fact that the rule is not even applied in relation to the constitutional violations in light of the Leon decision and other Supreme Court decisions, it is desirable to codify explicitly the principle that evidence may not be excluded on the basis of non-constitutional violations in the absence of statutory authority for doing so. This restriction on the exclusion of evidence is already implicit in the broader rule of Federal Rule of Evidence 402, which provides the "[a]ll relevant evidence is admissible, except as otherwise provided by the Constitution of the United States, by Act of Congress, by these rules, or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority." Subsection (b) would clarify the import of the principle of Rule 402 in relation to evidence obtained in violation of non-constitutional provisions.

The value of such clarification is illustrated by the case of United States v. Caceres, 440 U.S. 741 (1979), in which a defendant accused of bribing an IRS agent attempted to secure the exclusion of evidence of his guilt on the ground that procedures specified in IRS regulations had not been complied with in obtaining the evidence. Under the plain terms of Rule 402, this argument should have been rejected summarily as an effort to secure the exclusion of relevant evidence in circumstances in which exclusion was not provided for by "the Constitution . . . by Act of Congress, by [the] rules [of evidence], or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority." The Supreme Court did reject the defendant's effort to create an exclusionary rule for violations of IRS regulations, but declined to address the government's argument that this result was required by Rule 402. See 440 U.S. at 755 & n. 22.

While the Supreme Court reached a result consistent with Rule 402 for independent reasons in the Caceres decision, it failed to produce any directive to the inferior courts to comply with the terms of that rule. Efforts by defendants to secure the exclusion of relevant and probative evidence of their guilt on the basis of alleged violations of non-constitutional provisions have accordingly continued to be a source of litigation in the lower courts. Subsection (b) would foreclose such litigation in the absence of a decision by Congress or by the Supreme Court pursuant to its statutory rulemaking authority to authorize the use of the exclusionary sanction and would ensure consistent compliance with the principle of Rule 402 in this context in future judicial decisions.

Subsection (c) of proposed section 3508 states that the section shall not be construed to require or authorize the exclusion of evidence in any proceeding. This makes it clear that the section is not to be construed as reflecting legislative approval of the exclusion of evidence as a sanction for official misconduct in any circumstances, and that the section's rules which explicitly bar the exclusion of evidence in certain circumstances should not be understood as implying that the exclusion of evidence is appropriate or permissible in other circumstances. The Supreme Court has recognized a number of important exceptions to the application of the exclusionary rule which are not confined to the "objective reasonableness" situation, including holding that the exclusionary rule is wholly inapplicable in grand jury and deportation proceedings and generally inapplicable in habeas corpus proceedings, see United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338 (1974); INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032 (1984); Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465 (1976), and that evidence inadmissible at trial in the government's case in chief under the exclusionary rule may nevertheless be used for impachment, see Walder v. United States, 347 U.S. 62 (1954). In light of subsection (c), there would be no basis for arguing that these broader limitations of the exclusionary rule should be restricted or reconsidered in light of proposed section 3508, or that it would be inappropriate for the courts to create other broader limitations on the exclusionary rule in the future.

TITLE II—HABEAS CORPUS

Title II would amend various provisions of title 28, United States Code, and a related Rule of Appellate Procedure, concerning the availability of collateral relief in the federal courts for state and federal prisoners. Among the matters addressed by these amendments are the standard of review in habeas corpus proceedings, the effect of procedural defaults on the subsequent availability of collateral relief, the time within which collateral relief may be sought, the requirement of exhaustion of state remedies, and the procedure on appeal in collateral proceedings.

The proposal is generally the same as S. 1763 of the 98th Congress, which was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee and passed by the full Senate by a vote of 67 to 9 in 1984. The ensuing section-by-section analysis briefly describes the various provisions of title II. The Senate Judiciary Committee's report on S. 1763 (S. Rep. No. 226, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. (1983)) provides a more detailed explanation as well as extensive analysis of the policy issues addressed in the legislation.

Section 202 of title II would add two new subsections to section 2244 of title 28, United States Code. Proposed section 2244(d) relates to the effect of a state prisoner's failure to raise a claim properly in state proceedings on the subsequent availability of federal habeas corpus. Proposed subsection (d)(1) of section 2244 sets out a general standard under which such a procedural default would bar access to federal habeas corpus unless it was the result of state action in violation of federal law. Attorney error or misjudgment in failing to raise a claim properly would excuse a procedural default under this standard if it amounted to constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel, but lesser degrees of attorney error or misjudgment would not excuse a default. See Murray v. Carrier, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645-46 (1986). Proposed subsection (d)(2)-(4) of section 2244 further provides for excuse of a procedural default where a claim raised in a habeas corpus proceeding asserts a new, retroactive right subsequently recongized by the Supreme Court, where the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered prior to the default through the exercise of reasonable diligence, or where a constitutional violation asserted in the claim has probably resulted in a factually erroneous conviction or a sentence predicated on an erroneous factual determination. Proposed section 2244(d) is generally a codification and clarification of the existing caselaw standards governing the excuse of procedural defaults in collateral proceedings. See Murray v. Carrier, 106 S. Ct. at 2644-46, 2650; Smith v. Murray, 106 S. Ct. 2661, 2668 (1986).

Proposed new section 2244(e) in section 202 of the bill would establish a one year time limit on applications for federal habeas corpus, normally commencing at the time state remedies are exhausted. This would provide state defendants with ample time to seek federal review following the conclusion of state proceedings, but would avoid the acute difficulties of proof that currently arise when federal habeas corpus is sought by a prisoner years or decades after the state trial. The proposed limitation rule may be compared to various existing time limits on seeking review or re-opening of criminal judgments in the federal courts, such as the normal ten day limit on appeals by federal defendants under Fed. R. App. P. 4(b); the normal sixty day limit on a state defendant's application for direct review in the Supreme Court under Sup. Ct. R. 20; and the two year limit on motions for new trials based on newly discovered evidence under Fed. R. Crim. P. 33. Proposed section 2244(e) further provides for deferral of the start of the limitation period in appropriate cases, such as assertion of newly recognized rights or newly discovered claims.

Section 203 of the bill would amend section 2253 of title 28, United States Code, so as to vest in the judges of the courts of appeals exclusive authority to issue certificates of probable cause for appeal in habeas corpus proceedings. It would also create an identical certificate requirement for appeals by federal prisoners in collateral relief proceedings pursuant to section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. This would implement recommendations of Judge Henry Friendly of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. See Friendly, Is Innocence Irrelevant? Collateral Attack on Criminal Judgments, 38 U. Chi. L. Rev. 142, 144 n.9 (1970). The reform would correct inefficiencies of the current system under which an appellate court is obliged to hear an appeal on a district court's certification, though it may believe that the certificate was improvidently granted, and under which a prisoner is afforded duplicative opportunities to persuade first a district judge and then an appellate judge that an appeal is warranted. Section 204 of the bill would amend Fed. R. App. P. 22 to conform it to the amendments of section 203.

Section 205 of the bill would make various changes in section 2254 of title 28, United States Code. Section 205(a) would amend current section 2254(b) to clarify that a habeas corpus petition can be denied on the merits notwithstanding the petitioner's failure to exhause state remedies. This would implement a recommendation of Professor David Shapiro. See Shapiro, Federal Habeas Corpus: A Study in Massachusetts, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 321, 358-59 (1973). It would avoid the waste of state and federal resources that presently results when a prisoner presenting a hopeless petition is sent back to the state courts to exhaust state remedies.

Section 205(c) of the bill would add a new subsection (d) to section 2254, United States Code. Proposed subsection (d) would accord deference to the result of full and fair state adjudications. This may be compared to the standard of review stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Ex Parte Hawk, 321 U.S. 114, 118 (1944), prior to the unexplained substitution of the current rules of mandatory re-adjudication by the decision in Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443 (1953). To be full and fair in the intended sense the state court determination must be reasonable, and must be arrived at by procedures consistent with applicable federal law, including the constitutional requirement of due process. In addition, re-adjudication by the federal habeas court would be allowed in cases in which new evidence of substantial importance came to light or a retroactive change of law of substantial importance occurred after the state proceedings. See S. Rep. No. 226, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 24-27 (1983).

Section 205(b) of the bill would simplify current section 2254(d), which is verbose, confusing, and obscure; redesignate it as section 2254(e); and bring its formulation into conformity with that of proposed new section 2254(d). This provision would be of minor practical significance, coming into play only when the general standard governing deference to state determinations in proposed new section 2254(d) was found by the habeas court to be unsatisfied.

Section 206 of the bill would amend section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. It would carry out reforms in the collateral remedy for federal prisoners comparable to the rules proposed in section 202 of the bill governing excuse of procedural defaults and time limitation in habaes corpus proceedings.

TITLE III—CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Title III would provide procedures to permit the death penalty for certain heinous federal offenses. Although various provisions of the United States Code now authorize the imposition of the sentence of death for crimes of homicide, treason, and espionage, in most instances these sentences have been unenforceable because they fail to incorporate a set of legislated guidelines to guide the sentencer's discretion in coming to a determination whether the sentence of death is merited in a particular case. This requirement was first articulated by the Supreme Court in its decision in Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972). In a series of decisions following Furman, the Court has given further guidance on the constitutional requisites of a statute authorizing the imposition of capital punishment. Notable in this series of cases was a group of landmark death penalty decisions—Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153 (1976); Proffitt v. Florida, 428 U.S. 242 (1976); Jurek v. Texas, 428 U.S. 262 (1976); Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280 (1976); and Roberts v. Louisiana, 428 U.S. 325 (1976)—in which the Court held that the death penalty was a constitutionally permitted sanction if imposed under certain procedures and criteria which guarded against the unfettered disretion condemned in Furman, but which retained sufficient flexibility to allow the consideration of aggravating and mitigating factors in each case.

In the fifteen years since the Furman decision, forty-one of the fifty states have enacted laws to restore the availability of the death penalty as a sanction for the most serious crimes. During the same period, Congress has on several occasions considered legislation to provide constitutional procedures that would permit the restoration of the death penalty to the federal criminal justice system, but with the exception of a death penalty provision included in anti-aircraft hijacking legislation in 1974, no such statute has been passed by the Congress.

In the 97th, 98th and 99th Congresses, the Senate Judiciary Committee devoted considerable effort to the development of legislation that would establish constitutional procedures for the imposition of the death penalty at the federal level. In the 98th Congress the Committee reported a bill, S. 1765, which was very similar to the Administration's death penalty proposal of the same vintage (S. 829). It incorporated provisions to comport with the Superme Court's capital punishment decisions over the past several years and passed the Senate by a vote of 63-32. In the 99th Congress, the Senate Judiciary Committee favorably reported a death penalty bill, S. 239, which closely resembled S. 1765, but no further action was taken on this measure or on a House-passed death penalty, in H.R. 5484, which included similar procedures although limited in scope to killings in the course of a continuing drug enterprise offense.

The section-by-section analysis below briefly describes the various provisions of title III. The Judiciary Committee's Reports on S. 1765 (S. Rep. No. 251, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. (1983) and S. 239 (S. Rep. No. 282, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. (1986)) provide a more detailed analysis as well as a lengthy discussion of the policy and constitutional issues addressed in this legislation.

Section 302 adds a new chapter 228 to title 18 of the United States Code consisting of sections 3591 through 3597, and makes necessary technical amendments. These sections provide that the punishment for certain crimes may extend to the death penalty and set forth the procedures for determining whether the death penalty should be imposed in a particular case involving a conviction of such a crime.

Section 3591 sets out the offenses for which the death penalty may be imposed if, after consideration of the mitigating and aggravating factors applicable to the case in a post-verdict hearing (described in subsequent sections), it is determined that the impositon of death is justified. The offenses are treason, espionage, certain types of homicides, and an attempt to kill the President of the United States under specified circumstances. The circumstances justifying the death penalty for attempted Presidential assassination are that the attempt resulted in bodily injury to the President or came dangerously close to causing the President's death.

The homicides for which the death penalty may be imposed are described in subsection 3591(c). They are those in which the defendant intentionally killed the victim (subsection 3591(c)(1)), those in which the defendant intentionally participated in an act contemplating that life would be taken or intending that lethal force would be used in connection with someone other than a participant in the crime and as a direct result of the act the victim died (subsection 3591(c)(2)), and those in which the defendant intentionally and significantly participated in an act, knowing that the act created a grave risk of death to a person other than a participant such that participation in the act constituted a reckless disregard for human life, and the victim died as a direct result (subsection 3591(c)(3)). Those threshold criteria limit the death penalty to defendants with a high degree of culpable responsibility for the harm or attempted harm and are designed to meet the constitutional requirements under Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584 (1977), Edmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (1982), Cabana v. Bullock, 106 S. Ct. 689 (1986), and Tison v. Arizona, —— U.S.——, No. 84-6075 (April 21, 1987).

The language in subsections 3591(c)(1) and 3591(c)(2) was contained in similar death penalty bills considered in previous Congresses. The language in subsection 3591(c)(3) was added because of the holding in the recent Tison case, which further explained the degree of culpability required to justify the death penalty in felony murder cases as set out in the earlier Edmund decision. Tison allowed the death penalty to be imposed in cases where the defendant was a major participant in the crime that resulted in the homicide and showed a reckless indifference to human life. Specifically, Tison held "that the reckless disregard for human life implicit in knowingly engaging in criminal activities known to carry a grave risk of death represents a highly culpable mental state, a mental state that may be taken into account in making a capital sentencing judgment when that conduct causes its natural, though also not inevitable, lethal result." (Slip op., p. 20.) Subsection 3591(c)(3) codifies the Tison holding. It does not require that the government prove the defendant knew that his act met the legal criteria for reckless disregard for human life, merely that his act in fact involved such a disregard. Moreover, the term "act" as used in subsection 3591(c)(3), like the term "act" in subsection 3591(c)(2), is not limited to a single specific act such as pulling a trigger. Rather, it includes a series of acts or a course of conduct such as loading a gun just prior to a bank robbery, handing it to an accomplice while the robbery is in progress, and forcing bank tellers against a wall where the accomplice shot them to death.

Section 3591 precludes imposition of the death penalty on a person who was less than eighteen years old at the time of the offense. This limitation is not constitutionally required and in prior versions of the bill such youth was only a mitigating factor. However, this bill follows the most recent capital punishment bill approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and does not allow the imposition of the death penalty on a person who committed the offense when less than eighteen years of age.

Section 3592 sets forth the statutory mitigating and aggravating factors to be considered by the jury or judge in determining whether a sentence of death is justified upon conviction of a crime for which the sentence is authorized. The section also allows, consistent with Supreme Court decisions, for the consideration of any other aggravating or mitigating factor, not listed in the section, which might affect such a determination. See Skipper v. South Carolina, 476 U.S.———1986); Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586 (1978); Barclav v. Florida, 463 U.S. 939 (1983); Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. 862 (1983).

Subsection (a) sets forth three mitigating factors which must be considered. They are that the defendant's mental capacity was significantly impaired although not so impaired as to constitute a defense, that the defendant was under unusual and substantial duress although not such as to constitute a defense, and that the defendant was an accomplice whose participation in the offense was relatively minor. Subsection (a) further states that the jury or judge shall also consider whether other mitigating factors exist.

Subsection (b) sets forth the aggravating factors for treason and espionage. They are that the defendant has previously been convicted of an offense involving espionage or treason for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute, that the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of substantial danger to the national security, and that the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person.

Subsection (c) sets forth the aggravating factors for the homicide offenses and for the attempted murder of the President. They are (1) that the death occurred during the commission, attempted commission, or the immediate flight from the commission, of one of several exceptionally dangerous crimes such as escape from prison, a murder by a prisoner serving a life sentence, aircraft hijacking, certain explosive offenses, and espionage; (2) that the defendant has previously been convicted of another federal or state offense resulting in death for which life imprisonment or death was authorized; (3) that the defendant had previously been convicted of two or more federal or state offenses, committed on different occasions, each involving the infliction or attempted infliction of serious bodily injury and each punishable by imprisonment for more than one year; (4) that the defendant in the commission of the offense knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim; (5) that the defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner;[1] (6) that the defendant procured the commission of the offense by paying or promising to pay anything of pecuniary value; (7) that the defendant committed the offense for receiving or in the expectation of receiving something of pecuniary value; (8) that the defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation; (9) that the victim was particularly vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity; and (10) that the defendant committed the offense against certain specified public officials.

It should be noted that subsections (b) and (c) do not define the instances where the death penalty is authorized. This authorization is in the penalty provision for each individual capital offense and generally carries forward the provisions in the current statutes that are or may be unenforceable due to the aforementioned constitutional procedural problems. The offenses in current law that are changed to capital offenses by this title are the murders of certain foreign officials under 18 U.S.C. 1116, kidnaping where a death results, murders for hire or in aid of racketeering, murders of American hostages abroad, terrorist murders of American nationals abroad, causing death while engaged in a continuing drug enterprise, and attempted assassination of the President. In addition, section 310 of title III creates a new Federal capital offense of murder committed by a Federal prison inmate serving a life sentence. The factors listed in subsections (b) and (c) merely specify the aggravated instances in which the commission of a capital offense will permit a jury to determine whether the death penalty is justified.

Section 3593 sets out the procedure for a special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified. At the conclusion of the hearing the jury (or, as will be explained, in some cases the judge) will return a finding as to whether the sentence of death is justified.

[1] This aggravating factor encompasses situations involving "torture, aggravated battery, the deliberate prolonging of suffering, or the serious physical abuse of the victim before inflicting death." S. Rep. No. 251, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 5. It would also cover other situations involving unusual, extraordinary depravity, such as "the execution style killing of a stranger for the thrill of it or the extended terrorizing of a victim before execution." Id. at 6.

Subsection 3593(a) provides that if the attorney for the government believes that the circumstances of one of the offenses for which the death penalty is authorized (the offenses set out in section 3591) justify the imposition of the death penalty, he or she must file with the court and serve on the defendant a notice of this conclusion and set forth the aggravating factors (including any statutorily enumerated) the government proposes to show at the hearing. The notice must be filed and served on the defendant a reasonable time before trial or the accepting of a guilty plea or at such time thereafter as the court may permit upon a showing of good cause. The notice provision is intended to give adequate notice to the defendant so he can prepare for the post-conviction sentencing hearing and to ensure an appropriate voir dire that comports with applicable Supreme Court cases.

Subsection 3593(b) provides that if the attorney for the government has filed the notice required by subsection (a) and if the defendant is found guilty, a sentencing hearing shall be conducted by the judge who presided at trail or accepted the guilty plea or by another judge if the first one is unavailable. No presentence report is to be prepared in such a case inasmuch as the issue at the hearing is the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors and the justifiability of imposing the death sentence, and the issue is to be determined based solely on the information presented at the hearing. The hearing is to be conducted before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt, except that a jury may be impaneled for the purpose of the sentencing hearing in a case in which the defendant was convicted on a trial to the court or on a plea of guilty, in a case in which the original jury was discharged for good cause, or in a case where reconsideration of the sentence is necessary. This subsection also provides that the defendant may move that the sentencing hearing be conducted before the court alone but that the attorney for the government must concur. In the absence of this concurrence by the government, the sentencing hearing is before a jury.

Subsection 3593(c) deals with proof of the aggravating and mitigating factors. Any information relevant to the sentence may be presented including information concerning any mitigating or aggravating factor permitted or required to be considered under section 3592. The information may consist of trial transcripts and exhibits or relevant parts thereof if the hearing is before a jury or judge not present during the trial. Other relevant evidence may be presented regardless of its admissibility under the rules of evidence, except that the court may exclude information if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of its creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The burden of establishing an aggravating factor is on the government and the standard of proof for such a factor is beyond a reasonable doubt. The defendant has the burden of establishing any mitigating factor but this burden is satisfied if the defendant proves such a factor by a preponderance of the evidence.

Subsection 3593(b) deals with the return of special findings required in the sentencing hearing. It provides that the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, must consider all the information received at the sentencing hearing. The jury, or if there is no jury, the court must return a special finding as to each aggravating or mitigating factor concerning which evidence was received at the hearing. In cases where there is a jury, the special finding must indicate that the jury has found the existence of some mitigating or aggravating factor required to be considered by section 3592 by a unanimous vote, although it is not necessary that there be a unanimous vote on any specific mitigating or aggravating factor. A specific mitigating or aggravating factor can be established if at least nine members of the jury finds the existence of that factor. In cases where evidence of more than one mitigating or aggravating factor is introduced, simple fairness to both the government and the defendant requires that an aggravating or mitigating factor be considered established if at least nine of the twelve jurors find a particular factor, but cannot reach unanimous agreement as to which one, provided they reach unanmious agreement that some such factor has been established. Unanimity as to the presence of a particular aggravating or mitigating factor is not constitutionally required because the presence or absence of any one such factor is not determinative of whether the death penalty should or should not be imposed. In Poland v. Arizona, 106 S. Ct. 1749 (1986), the Court considered the fact-finding process engaged in during the sentencing phase of capital cases under Arizona law and stated it was "not prepared to . . . view the capital sentencing hearing as a set of mini-trials on the existence of each aggravating factor. . . . Aggravating circumstances are not separate penalties or offenses, but are 'standards to guide the making of [the] choice' between the alternative verdicts of death and life imprisonment . . ." 106 S. Ct. at 1755. Moreover, the Court has held that juror unanimity even on the question of guilt or innocence is not essential to the right to a trial by jury. See Apodaca v. Oregon, 406 U.S. 404 (1972).

Subsection 3593(e) provides that if one or more of the statutorily required aggravating factors is found to exist (a constitutional requirement under Zant v. Stephens and Barclay v. Florida, supra) the jury, or the court if there is no jury, must then consider whether all the aggravating factor or factors which it has found outweigh all mitigating facors which it has found, or, if no mitigating factor has been found, whether the aggravating factor or factors alone are sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based on this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall return a finding as to whether a sentence of death is justified.

Subsection 3593(f) is designed as a special precaution against discrimination by the jury against the defendant on the basis of the defendant's or the victim's race, color, national origin, creed, or gender. It provides that in a sentencing hearing in which the death penalty is sought, the jury shall be specifically instructed that it must not consider these factors. Moreover, the jury must return to the court a certificate signed by each juror stating that consideration of these factors was not involved in his or her individual decision.

Section 3594 provides that if the jury, or the court if there is no jury, returns a finding that a sentence of death is justified, the court must sentence the defendant to death. If, however, the finding was that no statutorily required aggravating factor was found to exist, or that even if such a factor was found a sentence of death was not justified, the court shall impose any sentence other than death authorized by law. This section also provides that notwithstanding any other provision of law, life imprisonment without parole is an authorized sentence for a conviction of an offense punishable by death if the maximum term of imprisonment for such an offense is life.

Section 3595 sets out the rules applicable to appeals from the imposition of the death sentence. A sentence of death shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon an appeal of the sentence by the defendant. Notice of appeal of the sentence must be filed within the time for the filing of a notice of the appeal of the conviction. This permits the court to consolidate the appeal of the sentence and the appeal of the conviction, and such consolidation is explicitly provided for. The review of a case in which the death sentence has been imposed must be given priority over all other cases. The court of appeals must consider the entire record including the evidence submitted at trial, the information submitted during the sentencing hearing, the procedures employed at the sentencing hearing, and the special findings returned at the sentencing hearing as to the existence of the aggravating and mitigating factors. The court of appeals must affirm the sentence if it finds that the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor, and the information supports the special findings of the existence of an aggravating factor or factors. See Zant v. Stephens, supra (death sentence valid even if an aggravating factor is invalidated or dound inapplicable on appeal, provided at least one valid statutory aggravating factor remains). Proportionality review with other death cases is not a part of the review process. Pulley v. Harris, 465 U.S. 37 (1984).

In all other cases, the court of appeals must remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593 or for imposition of another authorized sentence, as appropriate. The court of appeals must state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death.

Section 3596 is concerned with the implementation of a sentence of death. A person sentenced to death shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General pending completion of the appeal and review process. When the sentence is to be implemented, custody of the person would be given to a United States Marshal who would then supervise the implementation of the penalty in accordance with the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If that State has no death penalty, the court would designate another State which does have such a penalty and the execution would be carried out in the manner prescribed in that State. This part of the section generally carries forward a portion of the provisions of present section 3566 of title 18. This section also states that a sentence of death shall not be carried out on a person who lacks the mental capacity to understand the death penalty and why it was imposed on that person (this implements the constitutional bar on execution of the mentally incompetent, see Ford v. Wainwright, — U.S. — (1986)) or on a woman while she is pregnant.

Section 3597 carries forward other parts of current section 3566 by authorizing the United States Marshal charged with implementing the sentence of death to use State facilities and to pay the costs thereof.

Section 303 of title III applies the procedures of the new chapter 228 concerning the death penalty to violations of chapter 2 of title 18 dealing with the destruction of or damage to aircraft and motor vehicles where death results. Such violations are punishable by death under current law but the penalty is unavailable due to the previously discussed procedural problems.

Section 304 prescribes the scope of the availability of the death penalty for espionage. In accordance with the view reflected in prior bills that the death penalty is both constitutional and appropriate for this offense, the penalty is retained as a possible punishment for peacetime espionage where it concerns certain major military matters, such as nuclear weapons or satellites which directly affect national defense. The death penalty, of course, remains applicable under 18 U.S.C. 794(b) to any instance of wartime espionage.

Sections 305, 306, and 307 apply the sentencing procedures of the new chapter 228 to three serious explosive offenses where death results. These sections, all of which deal with deliberate property destruction by explosives or the transportation of explosives in interstate commerce for the purpose of injuring persons or property, currently provide for the death penalty, but the penalty is unenforceable.

Section 308 applies the new death penalty procedure to the offense of first degree murder committed in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction. Such a crime is presently punishable by the unenforceable death penalty provisions of current law.

Section 309 amends 18 U.S.C. 1116(a) to provide for the death penalty for the first degree murder of a foreign official, an official quest of the United States, or an internationally protected person. This offense was created after the Furman decision and so has not previously included the death penalty as a possible punishment. However, this section makes the penalty for this offense the same as for first degree murder in other situations subject to Federal jurisdiction.

Section 310 adds a new section 1118 to title 18 to provide that a person serving a life sentence in a Federal prison who murders another person will be punished by death or by life imprisonment without the possibility of parole.

Section 311 amends the Federal kidnaping statute, 18 U.S.C. 1201, to provide for the imposition of the death penalty, under the sentencing procedures of chapter 228, if death results from the kidnapping.

Section 312 provides for the death penalty under 18 U.S.C. 1203 (enacted in 1984) if death occurs in the course of a hostage-taking abroad of an American national such as occurred in the recent incident involving the cruise ship Achille Lauro.

Section 313 applies the new sentencing provisions to section 1716, dealing with the mailing of injurious articles where death results. This merely effectuates the presently unenforceable death penalty provision for this section.

Section 314 of the bill would for the first time provide for the death penalty for an attempt to kill the President if the attempt results in bodily injury to the President. The procedures of the new chapter 228 would be applicable to such an offense.

Sections 315 and 316 provide for the death penalty under two related offenses enacted in 1984 proscribing murders for hire and killings in aid of racketeering activity (18 U.S.C. 1952A and 1952B).

Section 317 applies the new sentencing provisions of chapter 228 to violations of 18 U.S.C. 1992 involving the wrecking of trains where death results. This effectuates the presently unenforceable death penalty provision for this offense.

Section 318 restricts the application of the death penalty in cases of bank robbery and incidental crimes in violation of section 2113 of title 18 to cases where death results, and provides for life imprisonment as an alternative penalty in such cases.

Section 319 amends 18 U.S.C. 2331(a)(1), a provision enacted as part of the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986 (P.L. 99-399, August 27, 1986), to provide for the death penalty in cases of first degree murder of a United States national while such national is outside the United States.

Section 320 provides for the death penalty for a person who causes the death of another while engaged in a continuing criminal enterprise offense under 21 U.S.C. 848. This in essence carries forward the death penalty provision twice passed by the House of Representatives in H.R. 5484 near the end of the 99th Congress.

Section 321 applies the procedures of chapter 228 to aircraft piracy where death results from the commission or attempted commission of the offense by repealing the capital punishment procedures in the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1473(c)) while retaining the death penalty for air piracy where death results.

Section 322 provides that the capital punishment procedures of the new chapter 228 shall not apply to prosecutions under the Uniform Code of Military Justice inasmuch as the military code has its own set of death penalty procedures and provisions.

TRIBUTE TO COMMITTEEPERSONS

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, as 1987, the year in which we celebrate the bicentennial of the signing of the Constitution of the United States of America, draws to a close, I believe that we should recognize some of the important men and women who take their own time to keep alive the crucial principles embodied in our Constitution. I am referring to the local committeepersons throughout this great Nation.

Committeemen and committeewomen do the grassroots work critical in the election of individuals to represent our people at all levels of government. In our system of representational democracy in which we the people choose how we will be governed and who will represent us, the work of a committeeperson is one of the highest expressions of civic virtue.

Regardless of what political party these great Americans are associated with, all of us in this country owe a debt of gratitude to the individuals who play an active part in our electoral process. All too often the important contributions of committeemen and committeewomen are forgotten by the general public. Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that these people are the oil that keeps the wheels of democracy turning.

Mr. Speaker, as we enter the third century in the life of the U.S. Constitution, I want to take this opportunity to publicly recognize and thank some of the committeemen and committeewomen, Democrats and Republicans alike, from my congressional district in northeastern Pennsylvania.
